THE CHRONICLES AND MEMORIALS OF
GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND
DURING THE MIDDLE AGES.

PUBLISHED BY THE AUTHORITY OF HER MAJESTY'S TREASURY, UNDER THE DIRECTION OF THE MASTER OF THE ROLLS.

ON the 26th of January 1857, the Master of the Rolls submitted to the Treasury a proposal for the publication of materials for the History of this Country from the Invasion of the Romans to the Reign of Henry VIII.

The Master of the Rolls suggested that these materials should be selected for publication under competent editors without reference to periodical or chronological arrangement, without mutilation or abridgment, preference being given, in the first instance, to such materials as were most scarce and valuable.

He proposed that each chronicle or historical document to be edited should be treated in the same way as if the editor were engaged on an Editio Princeps; and for this purpose the most correct text should be formed from an accurate collation of the best MSS.

To render the work more generally useful, the Master of the Rolls suggested that the editor should give an account of the MSS. employed by him, of their age and their peculiarities; that he should add to the work a brief account of the life and times of the author, and any remarks necessary to explain the chronology; but no other note or comment was to be allowed, except what might be necessary to establish the correctness of the text.

The works to be published in octavo, separately, as they were finished ; the whole responsibility of the task resting upon the editors, who were to be chosen by the Master of the Rolls with the sanction of the Treasury.

The Lords of Her Majesty's Treasury, after a careful consideration of the subject, expressed their opinion in a Treasury Minute, dated February 9, 1857, that the plan recommended by the Master of the Rolls "was well calculated for the accomplishment of this important national object, in an effectual and satisfactory manner, within a reasonable time, and provided proper attention be paid to economy, in making the detailed arrangements, without unnecessary expense."

They expressed their approbation of the proposal that each chronicle and historical document should be edited in such a manner as to represent with all possible correctness the text of each writer, derived from a collation of the best MSS., and that no notes should be added, except such as were illustrative of the various readings. They suggested, however, that the preface to each work should contain, in addition to the particulars proposed by the Master of the Rolls, a biographical account of the author, so far as authentic materials existed for that purpose, and an estimate of his historical credibility and value.

PREFACE.

§ 1. INTELLIGENCE of the death of the regent of France, and of the conclusion of the treaty of Arras, the two events with which the Preface to the former volume of this work concludes, reached England at the same time.¹ The sorrow which was felt for the loss of the duke of Bedford—and it was general and sincere—was speedily forgotten in the popular indignation excited by the union of Burgundy with France. Of these two powers the former had now become the more hateful; the success of a declared enemy is less galling than the defection of a trusted friend. Hostility modified by contempt was the prevailing feeling towards Charles; hostility intensified by fear was the prevailing feeling towards Philip. With the thoughtful this new coalition recalled the dying prophecy of Henry the Fifth, who had declared at Vincennes that the conquest of France by the English depended upon their co-operation with Burgundy. With the multitude the intelligence awoke only feelings of hatred and revenge. The duke of Gloucester, now freed from the restraint in which he had been held by his late brother, the regent, exerted himself to embitter the public mind against his old rival, and in this he was successful. It was not difficult to convince the nation that they had been cheated died at Rouen on the 14th of the same month. See the former volume of this work; Preface, p. lxviii. note 3.

¹ The treaty between the duke of Burgundy and the French ambassadors was concluded at Arras, 21 September 1435 (Monstrelet, ii. clxxxvii.); and the duke of Bedford

and insulted, and that throughout the negotiations at Arras the English ambassadors had made every reasonable concession, and had acted in entire good faith and with uniform sincerity. A despatch, written by them with this object immediately before their abrupt departure from the Conference, was circulated by order of the English government at Rouen among those towns in Normandy which still owned the sovereignty of Henry. "Certain notable clerks of good will" were furnished with copies of the same document, and were directed to instruct the people, by sermons and otherwise, how the king had been guided by a sincere desire for "the reverence of God and the relief of the poor."¹ When the parliament met at London, early in the month of October, the treachery of the false duke of Burgundy formed a prominent part in the opening homily which was delivered by the bishop of Bath and Wells, the lord chancellor.² The commons were invited to supply the means for carrying on the war which was declared to be imminent, and they responded to the appeal with unwonted alacrity. Besides the grant of a fifteenth, they consented to the imposition of a tax upon land at the rate of sixpence in the pound upon all estates of less than one hundred pounds a year, eightpence upon all above that rent up to four hundred, and two shillings upon such as produced a higher annual income.³ The king and the privy council, the lords and the commons, the clergy and the people, for once exhibited a remarkable degree of unanimity. Political divisions and personal feuds were for the time forgotten, and the nation seemed influenced by one spirit—the resolve to avenge at all hazards the insult offered to it by the treaty of Arras. The storm must break, in the first instance, over the head of the recreant duke of Burgundy. Steps were taken not only to prevent him from rendering assistance to France, but, if possible, to embroil him with his own subjects.

§ 2. Philip, upon his part, loudly proclaimed his desire to avoid a collision with his former allies, the English; and we may believe that herein he was sincere, since it obviously was his interest quietly to take possession of the enormous districts ceded to him by Charles rather than to fight for them.¹ But he was not permitted to remain neuter. His commerce was intercepted as it passed the English coast, and his vessels were captured.² The garrison of Calais commenced a series of aggressions, destructive as well as irritating, upon his neighbouring districts of Picardy and Flanders.³ Henry despatched ambassadors to the emperor Sigismond, the duke of Bavaria, and the archbishop of Cologne, urging them to attack Philip's territories upon the Rhine.⁴ Letters were addressed to the most important mercantile towns of

On the twenty-fourth of the same month he appeared before the Council in London. The statement of his receipts and expenses is preserved among the Ambassador's Accounts in the custody of the Master of the Rolls.

Belgium and Holland, in which they were assured that by continuing their ancient alliance with England and separating themselves from Burgundy, they would most readily expand their commercial interests.¹ His territories were parcelled out, as if he had already ceased to be an independent prince; the duke of Gloucester obtained a grant for life of the comté of Flanders, while that of Boulogne was conveyed to John lord Beaumont.²

Philip attempts to vindictae his conduct.

§ 3. According to his usual policy, the duke of Burgundy explained, negotiated, and protested. He sent an embassy into England to vindicate the honesty of his proceedings at Arras, but his emissaries were treated with marked courtesy. No sooner had they landed at Dover than they were told to consider themselves prisoners. Their credentials were taken from them and forwarded to London;³ and when,

³ The Issue roll of the Pell shows that on 7 May, 14 Hen. VI. [1436], a payment was made to the collector at Sandwich in consequence of an order which he had received to the effect that he should search for letters brought into England by foreigners, and that any which might be found should be forwarded to the king and council.

after some delay, they themselves were allowed to follow, they were exposed to increased indignities. They were lodged in the house of a shoemaker, the door of which they were not permitted to cross, not even to hear Mass, unless they were attended by certain officers, nominally heralds, but in reality gaolers. In vain they solicited an interview with the king or the council; before whom, however, the conduct of their master was, in the meantime, denounced with much bitterness. Henry shed tears of boyish vexation when he read the address of the letters which had been arrested at Dover; it was pointed out to him that whereas the duke had formerly styled him “his sovereign lord,” he now spoke of him as “his dear lord and cousin.” He was requested to observe that the title of “king of France,” for which so much blood had been shed and so much money squandered, was no longer conceded to him; Philip had transferred it, by virtue of the treaty of Arras, to Charles and his heirs.¹ The members of the Privy Council were still more indignant when they saw themselves defrauded of what had been purchased by the victories of Cressi and Poictiers, Azincourt and Vernueil, and they broke out into vehement denunciations against the treason of their late ally. While they were deliberating how they might express their anger with the most marked emphasis, intelligence reached London that the duke of Burgundy had taken possession of the cities and lordships of Saint Quentin, Corbey, Amiens, Saint Riquier, Abbeville, Dourlens, and Montreuil, which until this time had been the property of the English crown.² This practical illustration of what might be expected from the union between France and Burgundy excited to the uttermost the fury of the Londoners, always so turbulent and impetuous. They sacked the houses of some of the duke's subjects who had settled in the city as merchants, and murdered the inmates.¹ The ambassadors themselves escaped with difficulty. The treasurer of England hurried to their obscure lodging, and succeeded in despatching them to the coast before they were intercepted by the mob, now thirsty for more blood. They carried with them no written reply to their master's letters. None indeed was needed; for when they told him how narrow had been their own escape, and how, at every stage, they had heard curses heaped upon his head for his ingratitude, rebellion, and treachery, he felt that the English nation had thoroughly fathomed his motives and had correctly interpreted the import of the treaty of Arras.²

Prepares to besiege Calais.

§ 4. The duke of Burgundy was cautious and politic, but at the same time he was haughty and sensitive. He would have outwitted the English in diplomacy had they consented to negotiate; it would not have been undignified for him to have acted upon the defensive had they proclaimed war; but he could not brook the treatment to which his ambassadors had been exposed. His honour was wounded, and he must avenge the insult. He made no secret of his intention; he would strike a heavy blow at the English power in France, and that blow should be directed against Calais. His arrangements for the attack exhibit the skilful selfishness of his character. He had the address to persuade the Flemings that they, as much as he, were interested in destroying this mart for the sale of wool, the staple of England's commerce.³ These great cloth-producing cities of Flanders forgot that Calais was the channel through which the greater part of their enormous wealth had flowed in upon them for the last century, and that if the supply of the raw material were interrupted, the manufactured material could not be produced. They plunged into the war with that unreasoning and turbulent impetuosity at which this period of her history marks all the proceedings of Flanders.¹ Ghent alone furnished seventeen thousand men; and it was calculated that from his subjects in the Low Countries the duke received a body of no less than thirty thousand soldiers,² magnificently armed, and provided with all the munitions of war.³ The districts of Langres, Autun, Châlons, and Mâcon supplied, partly by loan and partly by gift, the large sums of money required for the expedition.⁴ The duke brought with him a formidable train of heavy artillery for the siege, among which were conspicuous three immense cannons, one drawn by twenty-six horses, one by thirty, and the third by fifty.⁵ His preparations were completed upon such an extensive scale that, usually cautious as he was, he

¹ The Flemings requested that his expedition should be exclusively conducted by themselves, and the duke of Burgundy of course accepted their proposal. (Basin, i. 126.) Henry made an effort to preserve their neutrality, but in vain.

² An anonymous chronicle (in the Digby MS. 196, fol. 152) would have us believe that the duke's force reached 100,000 men, while the continuation of Higden in the MS. Digby 201 (fol. 287, b.) and MS. Ashmole 796 extend it to the incredible sum of 150,000. Basin (i. 126) estimates the fighting men at more than 40,000, but I have preferred the lower computation of Monstrelet.

now ventured to boast that he was about to drive the English first out of Calais and then out of France. The same arrogant confidence prevailed among his troops. The Flemings loudly expressed their fear that they would find Calais without a single defender, and they took blame to themselves that they had not despatched their navy beforehand to cut off the retreat of the fugitives ; “for,” said they, “as soon as these English ‘‘ fellows know that the gentlemen of Ghent are on their ‘‘ march, they are sure to abandon their town and ‘‘ escape home across the Channel.”¹

Preparations for its defence.

§ 5. The English, however, had no such intention ; Calais was a position too important to be lost without a hard-fought struggle. They knew its value as an outlet for their commerce, and the experience of a century had taught them that it was the key to France, and the basis of their military operations against that kingdom.² They remembered “what a precious jewel “ the said town of Calais is to this realm ; what profit “ and refreshing groweth thereby to the king’s subjects, “ the which resort thither for merchandise and other “ causes ; what a bulwark and defence it is to this “ land and the inhabitants thereof ; with what pain “ and labour it was subdued and brought into the “ king’s obeissance, as well in shedding of many a man’s “ blood and losing of their lives, as by outrageous costs “ and charges to this land.” They vowed “that if “ so were that it should now perish, it should be

¹ Monstrelet, ii., ccv. They claimed to march in the van of the army, and to pitch their tents nearest to the besieged city. Basin i. 127.

² Froissart thus expresses the national sentiment of England in regard to the value of Calais :—

“ Vous devez savoir et croire que
“ Calais est la ville au monde que
“ la communauté d’Angleterre aime
“ le mieux ; car tant comme ils
“ seront seigneurs de Calais, ils “ dient qu’ils portent les clefs du

“ ture.” (iv. 35.)

"the greatest dishonour, rebuke, slander and shame
"that might grow to this realm."¹ The national spirit was now thoroughly roused, "and to speak the "truth," says Monstrelet,² "Henry, king of England,
"and his council, and the Three Estates of the realm,
"would rather have lost all that they had conquered
"during the previous thirty years than this single
"town." No wonder then that when "the gentlemen
"of Ghent" invested Calais, it was still garrisoned by the English, and the Red Cross of Saint George still floated proudly over its battlements.

§ 6. When it became known in England that Burgundy was in arms and that Calais was threatened, the duke of Gloucester requested that he might be appointed captain of that fortress.³ His petition was granted, and he busied himself in preparing for the coming siege.⁴ There was no difficulty in obtaining the necessary supplies. The parliament, as we have seen,⁵ had contributed liberally; and if this sum were not enough, cardinal Beaufort had advanced nine thousand marks specially "for the rescue of the town of Calais."⁶ The garrison was amply supplied with victuals and stores,

⁴ On 17 June ships were arrested for the king's service connected with Calais, on 6 July they were actively employed in victualling that town, and on the next day 1,000*l.* were awarded for the stores. Shortly afterwards various payments were made to the duke of Gloucester, namely, 3,000 marks, 1,034*l.* 13*s.*, and 485*l.* 5*s.* 10*d.* Six guns were delivered there at a cost of 26*l.*, and again, 26*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* were expended in the purchase of spades, shovels, mattocks, and "malles" of lead. All arrangements appear to have been completed by 17 July, between which date and 28 August no notices occur on the Issue Roll of the Pell, whence the previous information has been obtained.

and reinforced by a considerable body of troops.¹ The English nobility vied with each other in the extent and magnificence of the levies which they placed at the disposal of the government, and which they conducted in person across the Channel. The realities of the camp were intermingled with the ceremonials of the tournament; for, in accordance with the requirements of the stately chivalry of the age, a herald presented himself before the duke of Burgundy, and requested him to await the arrival of his former antagonist, the duke of Gloucester, under the walls of Calais.²

Progress of the siege. § 7. Personal and national animosities thus stimulated to the uttermost, the siege and the defence were conducted with equal energy. Scarcely, however, had the operations commenced before it became obvious

William of Worcester, see the present volume (p. 761), states that the English troops were reckoned at 50,000 men, but this is probably an exaggeration. Basin (i. 130) is probably nearer the mark when he calculates the duke of Gloucester's contingent at 15,000 troops, horse and foot. The extracts from the Pell Records, printed in this volume, Appendix to the Preface, No. 11. (p. xlix.,) show that a very considerable body had crossed over before Humphrey's tardy arrival at Calais. The following is the beginning of an unfinished letter respecting these preparations, which, however inflated its diction, probably represents the popular feeling of the time. "Carissime, "ne credatur Calesiam pavescere "propter obsidionis assertionem "venturæ. Et ut amicis nostris "veritas patefiat, sciatis quod apud "Calesiam sunt homines gigantibus

"majores, leonibus ferociores, dra-
"conibus terribiliores, quorum qui-

"trahentes vibrando percussare pro-
"ponunt; alii balistas bicornes tro-
"ellis attractas in tela volucria
"laxare se præparant; alii vero ex
"arcubus omne cœlum sagittarum
"grandine subtexere conabuntur."
MS. Ashmole, 789, fol. 172, b.

² In the printed editions of Monstrelet (ii. ccv.) this herald is styled "Kembroue," but the MS. Reg. 20 D. viii. fol. 127, proves that this is an error, and that the correct title was "Pennebroc." This is confirmed by the MS. Supplém. Franç. 292-10, p. 249, at Paris, which informs us that "Le due ecrivit a xxiv. des "plus grans seigneurs des duché "et comté de Bourgoyne, et leur "donna avis qu'estant devant "Calais, le due de Gloucestre, par "Pennebroc, son herault, signifie "la bataille."

that the English possessed an immense advantage in commanding an uninterrupted communication with the sea. The harbour was open ; vessels arrived daily from England, and troops and provisions in abundance were thrown into the garrison. The Flemings were the first to point out to the duke this defect in his arrangements, and they complained of his faulty tactics in no measured terms. Why had not his fleet arrived ? Why should they besiege the town by land if he did not blockade it, according to his promise, by sea ? He tried to pacify them ; he assured them that the navigation of the Channel, always difficult and dangerous, was especially so during the summer ; that the winds for some time past had been contrary and the weather rough ; and he pledged himself that ere long his shipping would be in sight. They consented to wait for a short time, but the concession was made with an ill grace. Their martial spirit had evaporated before the rough realities of actual warfare. They suffered severely in their daily skirmishes with the English garrison, and they bethought themselves of the losses which they were sustaining by this protracted absence from their shops and warehouses. Great was their delight, therefore, when it was announced that the long-expected fleet was visible in the offing ; and as it drew near, the duke and the Flemish generals rode down to the shore to welcome its arrival. At full tide four vessels detached themselves from the others and entered the harbour. They were laden with stones curiously crammed together with lead, and the duke explained to his staff that these ships were about to be sunk in the narrow channel, by which alone the town could be approached. The supplies from England would thus be cut off, and the garrison of Calais would soon be at the mercy of the besiegers. The operation was watched by many anxious eyes, but it was a failure. One of the vessels was sent to the bottom by the guns of the castle before she neared the harbour, and, although the other three were sunk by the engineers, yet their position was so unskilfully chosen, that at ebb-tide they were left high and dry upon the beach. The English,—women as well as men—rushed down to the shore, and, undeterred by the enemy's artillery, they completed the work of destruction. The stranded vessels were broken up; portions of the timber were carried off to supply the garrison with fuel, and the remainder was burnt. Philip's army could render no assistance, nor did the fleet make any further demonstration. Next day it stood out to sea, and it was gradually lost in the distance as it sailed northwards on its way back to Holland.¹

The Flemings break up the siege and retreat.

§ 8. The anger of the Flemings, hitherto curbed with difficulty, now broke out into undisguised rebellion. Some of them proposed, as the simplest mode of expressing their dissatisfaction, that the duke's councillors, the lords of Croy, Noyelle, and Brimeu, should at once be beheaded; and this suggestion would probably have been adopted but for the flight of the intended victims. The English garrison, perceiving the tumult, sallied from the town, killed about one hundred and sixty of the besiegers, and carried off a number of prisoners. The duke hurried into the midst of the camp on foot and attempted to restore order. It was too late: there was an end to all subordination. A few of the officers treated him with respect, but they formed the exception; the rest declared that they were befooled and betrayed; that they had been there too long, and would continue there no longer. The common soldiers threw off all semblance of restraint; and when the duke entreated them to preserve at least some semblance of military discipline, promising that if they would do so, he would accompany them in their march homewards, they told him to his face that they needed neither his advice nor protection. During the night the camp was one scene of uproar. The Flemings struck their tents, packed up such of their effects as they could remove, and attempted to destroy the remainder.¹ The booty which they left behind them was enormous, and as they fled they threw away their armour, for the cry was raised that the English were in hot pursuit. Their first halt was at Gravelines, where the duke attempted once more, but without effect, to restore order. Here the last shadow of discipline vanished ; the army broke up into separate companies, as convenience or caprice suggested, and each man took his road homewards.²

“non de ære et cupro factum,
“nuper ducis Burgundiae, voca-
“tum Dijion.” See the Calais Accounts, 28 Nov.—10 Feb. 18 Hen. IV. upon the Foreign Roll of the Pipe. This was probably one of the large siege-pieces brought from Dijon, mentioned at § 4.

² Monstrelet, ii. ccv. This expedition, which continued from 11 June to 26 August cost the town of Bruges alone 34,291*l.*, as appears by an account preserved at Lille. See Kervyn van Lettenhove, Hist. de Flandres, iv. 282.

³ The chronology of the duke of Gloucester's expedition into Flanders has not been accurately ascertained. It appears, however, from documents printed in the Fœdera (x. 649,659) that he was at Canterbury on 27 July, and on the 30th of that month it is said of him that he was employed in active service in the parts of Calais. (Id. 653.) The Flemings broke up their encampment during the night between Saturday the 28 and Sunday 29 July, and at that time Humphrey had not arrived. He entered Flanders on 6 August, and remained in that country for nine days. (William of Worcester (p. 761). His expedition therefore, according to this chronology, may be said to have extended from the 1st to the 15th of August.

A contemporary chronicle in activity by the intelligence that the victory which he had promised to himself had fallen to the lot of his subordinates. Had he left England a few days sooner than he did, he might have had some share in the pursuit of his retreating enemy, but even that inglorious triumph was denied him. Marching from Calais, he followed the duke's track as far as Gravelines, but again he was too late; Philip was beyond his reach. He took an undignified revenge by pillaging the unprotected country and murdering the unresisting peasantry. The demoralised Flemings durst not meet him in the field, and it did not suit him to lay siege to any fortified town. He might have marched to Lille or Arras, and punished the duke most effectually by provoking him to battle at disadvantage, or compelling him to decline the challenge, in which latter case Philip would have been humbled in the eyes of all Europe; but Humphrey lacked the discretion or the courage to adopt this measure. The whole expedition now degenerated into a mere marauding foray. The English could not carry off their plunder, and the cattle which they attempted to drive to Calais died by the road-side from fatigue and want of water. The duke of Gloucester returned home shortly afterwards; personally he had gained little renown, and no real advantage resulted from the campaign. Admitting that the duke of Burgundy had been defeated, he persuaded the world that it was by the defection of his friends rather than by the skill or enterprise of his enemies

the Digby MS. 169 gives a somewhat different account. According to this authority it was not until 2 August that the English council commanded that Humphrey should cross over, whereupon he embarked at Sandwich. His army entered Flanders on August 9, and remained for eleven days in that country, seeking the duke of Burgundy. Failing to find him, they returned by Saint Omer's to Calais, where they embarked on the 25th. The Digby MS. 201 and the Ashmole, 796, also extend the duke's stay in Flanders to eleven days.

The siege of Calais had proved a failure, but it had cost him little ; he had played his game with borrowed men and money, and he left his allies to pay the forfeit. He still had a large disposable force in Picardy, French Flanders, Burgundy and Champagne.¹ The real sufferer was England. She had exhausted herself in an unprofitable warfare, and had given a breathing-time to Charles, of which that monarch had not neglected to avail himself.²

§ 10. So entirely had the attention of England become engrossed in the defence of Calais and the raid into Flanders, that in the meantime the interests of France and Normandy were forgotten. No successor to the duke of Bedford was appointed until several months after his decease, and during the interval things were allowed to run their own course. The war became a series of petty skirmishes ; there was no unity of design, no consistency of action. Expeditions were extemporised according to the caprice or the zeal of each commander ; if successful, the country was embittered against the invader ; if they failed, they brought the English power into contempt.³ It is unprofitable to inquire by which side the first provocation was offered or the first blow stricken. The administration which for more than ten years had endeavoured without success, yet without cessation, to soften the antipathies

¹ Not more than two, or at most three thousand of the duke's own soldiers accompanied him on this expedition. Basin, i. 127.

² I have entered thus fully into the history of this campaign because it is the type of those which followed. They were nearly all conducted upon the same system ; there was no want of zeal upon the part of the leaders, the troops fought with their usual bravery, but the balance of advantage still lay with the enemy, and no definite advantage resulted to England, although for the time she might be the victor in the field.

³ The policy of the war, as then conducted, required that fortresses which could not be retained by an English garrison should be destroyed. See the Appendix to this Preface, No. ix.

and to blend the interests of the invader and the invaded, was now no more, and it had effected no permanent result. The passions which had been held under some appearance of control now burst into acts of undisguised violence. There was no longer any wish for a compromise; victory, vengeance, extermination were now the only ideas which found acceptance with the infuriated nationalities.¹

§ 11. The tide of success set in steadily in favour of France. When it was known that Burgundy had withdrawn from alliance with Henry, the entire population showed itself ripe for revolt;² all that was needed was the guidance of a few bold leaders competent to direct the outbreak. Nor were they long wanting; men in whom the people had confidence were speedily in the field. Even before the Conference at Arras had broken up, La Hire had announced his intention of attacking our fortresses in Normandy,³ and he kept his promise. Dieppe, so important by reason of its easy communication with England, was stormed by the marshal de Rieux, and its fall led to the surrender of Fécamp, Harfleur, Tancarville, Granville,⁴ and the other

² A curious illustration of the popular feeling of the districts between Arras and Paris is afforded by a document preserved in the Archives of France. It appears by a writ of Henry VI., dated 11 October 1435, that three of his commissioners wishing to return from the Conference of Arras were compelled to adopt the following circuitous route in order to reach the capital. Setting out from Arras, they went to Calais, from Calais they went to Boulogne, where they took shipping for Treport; from Treport they went by land to Caudebec, and thence on the Seine to Rouen. The journey from Rouen to Paris, was partly by water, partly by land, in consequence of the bridge of Meulan being in the hands of the French.

³ A muster roll, dated 2 October 1435, in the same depositary at Paris, is the authority for this statement.

chief towns on both sides of the Seine. The mischief did not end here ; it extended into Champagne,¹ and gradually drew nearer and nearer to Paris itself. During the temporary absence of the bulk of the English garrison of Pontoise, the inhabitants rose in arms, and having without much difficulty overpowered the guard left in charge of the town, they delivered that important fortress to the marshal l'Isle-Adam.² Gradually but surely the circle narrowed round the capital. Creil, Saint Germain-en-Laye, Vincennes, and Saint Denis surrendered or were carried by assault, and thus the road was opened for a more decided measure, an attack upon Paris itself.

§ 12. Early one morning, during the Easter week of Paris taken. the year 1436, the English garrison left that city for the purpose of intercepting some supplies intended for the use of the towns which had lately fallen into the hands of the French. Near Saint Denis they were surprised and defeated by a large body of troops, partly French, partly Burgundians, under l'Isle-Adam. Intelligence of their overthrow was conveyed to Paris by a few of the English who escaped ; but it speedily became known that by far the larger number had with difficulty found refuge in a neighbouring tower, where they were so closely blockaded that return was impossible. The garrison of Paris was thus reduced to a mere handful of men, who, whatever might be their courage or discipline, could not hold the city against an assault from without or an insurrection within. The inhabitants, who cordially hated the English, thought it best to employ both these modes of operation. They despatched a messenger to the marshal l'Isle-Adam, informing him that if he would appear before the walls, the gates would be thrown open to him. He promised the citizens that they might depend upon his co-operation, and early on the morning of the next day his troops effected an easy entrance into Paris.¹ They were immediately joined by the entire French population, who had expected their arrival, and the air rang with the shouts, “Long ‘live king Charles and the duke of Burgundy.’” It was a happy deliverance. Basin feelingly depicts the miseries to which Paris had been reduced by the English rule. The city was in a state of continual blockade by one party or the other, who endeavoured to starve out their adversaries. The neighbouring districts yielded neither cattle nor corn; the only supplies which arrived came from Normandy by water, under the escort of a body of armed men.² Four hundred English soldiers, whose wages had not been paid, deserted at one time, and scattering themselves as robbers over the country, plundered and murdered the inhabitants.³ No wonder then that the citizens of Paris hated the rule of the invaders; no wonder that they welcomed the troops who came to deliver them from such a thraldom.

§ 13. The English garrison was at this time commanded by lord Willoughby of Eresby, a brave and cool soldier, who had served under Henry the Fifth at Azincourt and the duke of Bedford at Vernueil.⁴ He now proved himself equal to the difficulty of his position. He had found time to concentrate his troops in the Rue St. Antoine, near the Bastille, which he had amply provided with stores and ammunitions. As it was impossible to resist the overpowering force which hemmed them in on every side, the English had no alternative but to shut themselves up within the walls of that fortress. Their position was desperate; the Bastille was tenable indeed for a time, but lord Willoughby was aware that he could not expect to be relieved, as no available force was sufficiently near at hand. He gladly surrendered, therefore, upon honourable terms, which were honourably observed; and the English troops were permitted to embark on the Seine on their way back to Rouen.

§ 14 The English were safe in Normandy, if anywhere. It was the earliest conquest of Henry the Fifth, and the troops which he brought with him had here gained their surest footing. From the time that he had landed the experiment had been made in that province to identify the interests of the conquerors with the conquered, and to blend them, if possible, into one nation.¹ The idea had also been a favourite one with the duke of Bedford, and he set himself to exercise it with uniform consistency. Although he had parcelled out the fairest lands of Normandy among his own followers, to whom he assigned the great fiefs vacated by their previous feudal lords, he encouraged the sub-tenants and humbler occupants to remain upon the soil, and he afforded them all the protection that the irregular legislation of the period and the locality would admit. He familiarised them with the advantages of a representative government, he respected their peculiar customs and precedents, and he endeavoured to convince them that he desired to administer an even-handed justice. He went further : he proved that he wished to trust them, and he believed that they might be trusted. Having originated a system of local police drawn from the native population, he permitted it to be armed and disciplined so as to become an effective militia. He employed it in repressing the violence and bloodshed which was so rife throughout the land. It was a hazardous experiment, and required delicate manipulation. So long as the duke of Bedford was alive, ready to direct and if necessary to curb and control the working of his system, it was successful ; but experience proved that he had created a power which might at any time turn against its author. As the English government in France grew weaker after his death, so in proportion grew the strength of the Norman population, and with its strength increased its resolution to follow the example of the inhabitants of Paris, and to shake off the yoke which galled it so heavily.¹

Their intended line of action.

§ 15. The English yoke did press heavily, and we cannot wonder that they attempted to cast it off. With the duke of Bedford expired the theory of an union of interests ending in an union of nationalities. The idea of the conqueror and the conquered again revived. Immediately upon the death of the duke was inaugurated a new system of policy, in which it was laid down as a fundamental principle “that the French having been rebels to “Henry VI., must in no wise be spared;” and it was recommended that the leaders of the troops should “burn and ravage the country as they go, sparing “nothing.” Orders were to be given “both to spoil, “waste, and subdue the countries of Anjou, Maine, “the Chartraine and Bretagne;” in other words, the districts from Normandy to the Loire were to be devastated. In his sternest mood Henry the Fifth had always respected the asylum which the feelings of the age universally conceded to churches and other places dedicated to religion ; but it was now proposed “that “no sanctuary should serve traitors, conspirators, or “rebels,” that is, that no such privilege should hereafter be extended to the French.

§ 16. Despite these disadvantages, the English flattered themselves that Normandy afforded them a stronghold which was still impregnable. The communication between it and England was still uninterrupted, easy and rapid ; and so long as it was master of the Seine, it could never suffer from the want of reinforcements, stores, and provisions. Both upper and lower Normandy were studded with castles garrisoned by a disciplined soldiery, which curbed, without difficulty, the irregular hostility of the neighbourhood. Courts of law, civil and criminal, were established over the whole province, the ramifications of which extended into the remotest parishes ; and these afforded a machinery which could be enforced or suspended at the pleasure of the dominant party. The English persuaded themselves, therefore that in falling back upon Normandy they had entrenched themselves in a stronghold all but impregnable ; and that they had but to await the arrival of reinforcements from England in order to recover possession of the capital of France.

Popular
tions.

17. Such, however, was not the case. The Norman population had, from the beginning, steadily refused to coalesce with the invaders, and many of them had preferred to leave house and home rather than hold them under the English domination. Those who remained upon the soil, although they submitted to the pressure of circumstances, evinced a determination to throw off the yoke whenever the opportunity should present itself, and that opportunity had now arrived.

§ 18. This being the position of affairs, we need not wonder that one insurrection after another broke out, and that each, though crushed for the time with a heavy hand, tended to the ultimate result by embittering yet more and more the spirit of the Normans against the invaders. Shortly before the English garrison, which had been driven from Paris, established itself at Rouen, the population of Lower Normandy, variously estimated as having consisted of from twelve to sixty thousand men, rose against their oppressors.¹ Few or many they were little better than a disorderly mob; they were without arms, without discipline, without a leader. The earl of Arundel led them into an ambuscade as they were approaching Caen, and falling upon them with his men-at-arms, cut them down without mercy. Those who escaped took refuge in the woods, where many of them perished miserably from cold and hunger.²

§ 19. From Lower Normandy the spirit of resistance passed to the upper districts of the province. In the month of August 1435 Rouen was alarmed by the approach of La Hire, and in the following autumn Dieppe³ had fallen into the hands of the insurgents. This was an important acquisition, for it afforded a safe port to the cruisers who hovered round the English coasts and intercepted the supplies which were in the course of transit to France. Rue and Crottoy, the two seaports of Picardy, situated at the mouth of the Somme,¹ passed at the same time into the hands of the enemy, and even Calais itself was threatened. Hemmed in on every side, dispirited, disorganised, defeated, and without a head, the dominion of the English in France seemed to be drawing to a close, and it became obvious, from the date of the loss of Paris, that their retention of Normandy would have a speedy and an ignominious termination.

§ 20. The arrival of the duke of York, the newly appointed governor, for a time arrested this calamity, and restored the drooping spirits of his countrymen. His high rank checked and brought into submission the various subordinate leaders, each of whom, safe for the time in his own castle, and supreme in his own district, cared little for any authority but his own. The administrative powers of the duke appear to have been considerable, and his military talents were equal to the emergency of his position. Ivry was regained, so were Pontoise and Luzarches, important steps towards the recovery of Paris itself. The navigation of the Seine was kept open by an armed vessel, which conveyed troops and stores from home; and there is reason to believe that if the council at Rouen had been supported by the council at London, Normandy might have continued for some time longer to be an English province.

§ 21. England, however, had neither the power nor the inclination to continue the war in France, or to carry ^{unable to carry on the struggle.}

into execution her theories of conquest or extermination. Crippled by the exertions which she had recently made to avenge herself upon the duke of Burgundy, not only was the Treasury exhausted of its ready money, but payments not yet due had been anticipated. In order in some degree to meet the applications for help which poured in from France, the king pawned the crown jewels, and entreated the assistance of his grand-uncle, the bishop of Winchester. The cardinal lent ten thousand marks, and consented to allow the king to postpone the payment of various sums in which he was indebted. Two thousand five hundred marks were raised upon the security of the fifteenths granted by the Commons, due next Whitsunday, and the staple of Calais lent twenty thousand marks. The archbishop of Canterbury contributed one thousand pounds, and loans and benevolences swelled the amount to a considerable sum. Thus provided with troops and money, the duke of York had crossed over into France as the successor to the duke of Bedford, and had set himself to the execution of the task which he had undertaken. His administration was marked by activity and prudence, and had he been adequately supported from home, it is possible that he might for a time have arrested the progress of the French; but he had speedily discovered that his difficulties were insuperable. He could have contended with the open hostilities of the French in France; but he could not neutralise the growing influence of a powerful faction in the court at home. As the king advanced towards manhood the weakness of his character became more and more conspicuous. Feeble mentally, it was obvious that he would become the tool of the boldest spirit with which he should come into contact; feeble bodily, it was doubtful how long he might survive. The house of York stood near the throne, nearer, in the opinion of many, than the house of Lancaster; but the house of

Lancaster was represented by the duke of Gloucester, the king's uncle, and it was his object to keep his rival of York at a distance. Letters accordingly were addressed to him by the Privy Council, urging him to continue at his post beyond the time specified in his indentures of military service.¹ He refused to prolong his stay, and he returned to the court. His successor was the earl of Warwick, who was appointed lieutenant-general and governor of France and Normandy on 16 July 1437.² He was provided with a liberal allowance of troops and money; by his commission he enjoyed powers equal to those which had been given to the duke of York, and a flattering letter was written to him expressive of the king's confidence in his administration.³ But as he did not cross over until 6 November, the interval between the expiration of the lieutenancy of the duke of York and the arrival of the new governor was being spent by the English in a state of inactivity,⁴ while the French under Charles conquered the important town of Montereau. Without having accomplished any success, he sank under the weight of the charge, and died at Rouen on the last day of April 1439.⁵

§ 22. From this period the French war became more and more unpopular. Disgusted at the way in which so much treasure had been expended, the nobility refused to embark in any similar undertaking; and when the appeal was made to the nation, the answer was that the funds which were necessary could no longer be provided. England had enough to do at home, and she soon found herself in the midst of a civil war of more than ordinary duration and ferocity, which engrossed all her energies, and prevented her from looking across the Channel.

England
the loser
by the French
wars.

§ 23. In every sense these French wars were prejudicial to the true interests of England. They drained off her treasure and her population at the period when both were essential to the development of her resources, and consequently retarded the progress which otherwise she might have made in the road of civilization. The wealth, the genius, and the energies of the nation were directed almost exclusively to warfare, while agriculture, manufactures, and commerce were neglected. And this warfare, conducted at such a costly sacrifice, gradually degenerated into a savage strife and lost all the redeeming features of a conflict waged between two generous antagonists; all humanity was gone, all courtesy, all respect for conquered valour, all gentleness in dealing with the wounded, the aged, and the helpless. Yet if England had sown the wind, she soon reaped the whirlwind. The men who had served in these wars returned debased and brutalised, familiar with the sight of bloodshed, indifferent to human suffering, regardless of the rights of property, defiant of all law save that of the stronger hand, and ripe, by the mere force of habit, for any atrocity of blood. Hence the peculiarly revolting character of the wars of the Roses; for the scenes enacted at St. Alban's and at Wakefield were but the repetition of numberless tragedies performed in France and Normandy and applauded in England.

§ 24. France, on the other hand, was emerging from the abyss of misery in which England was becoming engulfed, and had gradually been acquiring an immense accession of strength, morally and materially, from the trials through which she had passed. There was much to encourage her in the effort which she was now making, and she had but to persevere in order to be ultimately successful. It united the king and the clergy, the nobles and the commonalty, by a firmer bond than they had hitherto known.¹ She had no cause to upbraid England with the result of these wars, although in themselves they were most disastrous. They strengthened the character of the people by calling into exercise those feelings of patriotism which are essential to the existence of any great nation. They nerved men to fight for their country, for their homes, for their wives and children, for all that is dearer than life itself. The Norman held a much deeper stake in the war than the Englishman did, and he played the game better and was successful. This was not done without a sacrifice, and every sacrifice ennobles and sanctifies not only the victim, but those who partake in his sufferings. Of the people some were slain in battle, some were murdered by their firesides, some were butchered on the scaffold; but the spirit thus evoked was undying. Rather than submit to the yoke of the invader they became exiles, but wherever they went they were welcomed as the apostles of liberty.

§ 25. Such is an outline of the general current of events connected with the wars of the English in France during the reign of Henry the Sixth. When we examine in detail the documents which are here printed, we find that they elucidate a variety of points of different degrees of interest as regards not only the general history of France and Normandy, civil and ecclesiastical, but also their genealogy, and chiefly their topography. The capture, and recapture of the various towns and fortresses in these localities, which changed hands during the struggles here described, the troops furnished for their defence or attack, the military stores which were required, and the precautions which were adopted for their security, form the subject matter of a large number of our documents. It would neither be easy nor expedient to specify these in detail; but an exception may be made in favour of a few articles of peculiar interest. The first of these is a list of the military stores which were found in the castle of Rouen, upon the death of the duke of Bedford, a document which, among other reasons, is curious as illustrating the early history of artillery. It appears from this inventory that some of these pieces were of considerable size, carrying¹ a ball of six inches in diameter. None of them appear to have been loaded at the muzzle; the charge having been placed in a moveable chamber, was inserted in the breech. Each cannon was provided with several of these chambers, in order to facilitate rapidity of firing. Hand guns, probably wall pieces, were also in store in the same place; they were of brass, and were mounted, some upon stands called trivets (although they had four feet), some upon moveable frames, called wooden horses, which run upon wheels. Among the same stores also figures an instrument called a bricole, which had been used by the

French at the siege of Louviers, and which was imperfect at the time when the inventory was taken, a portion of it having been left behind when the besiegers had hurriedly abandoned their attack upon that town.¹

§ 26. A document of considerable interest here printed² furnishes us with a detailed account of the expenses incurred by the English government during the journey of Magaret of Anjou into England immediately previous to her marriage with Henry the Sixth. She was not the first princess to whom he had offered his hand, and had invited to share with him the waning glory of the throne of England. Arrived at maturity, it became important for the interests not only of the reigning family, but of the country at large, that the sovereign should become a husband and a father. In 1442 an alliance with the family of Armagnac was in contemplation. Thomas Beckington, afterwards bishop of Bath and Wells, who was instructed to visit the court of Lectoure, where the family of the count resided, to examine with great care the personal appearance of the two young princesses, and to report upon them with all speed to the king at London. The description which he transmitted was sufficiently captivating to induce Henry to proceed; and his next step was to despatch a portrait painter, named Master Hans³ (probably a Fleming), to execute a likeness of his intended consort. The progress, however, of the arms of Charles in Guyenne effectually thwarted

this alliance, and Henry was compelled to look elsewhere for a bride.¹

§ 27. In the negotiations which were resumed with France in the beginning of 1444, Henry attempted to unite diplomacy with matrimony, and to secure at once the double advantage of a truce and a wife. An embassy was sent, consisting of the earl of Suffolk, Adam Moleyns, bishop of Chichester, Sir Robert Roos, the English chancellor for France, Thomas Hoo, and others.² They landed at Harfleur, and proceeding by Rouen and Le Mans, reached Vendôme, where the conference was opened on 8th April. It proceeded to the satisfaction of both parties, and the most favourable results were anticipated from these amicable negotiations. A week afterwards the English commissioners sailed down the Loire from Blois (where the duke of Suffolk had visited his former prisoner, the duke of Orleans), and joined the royal family, at that time resident in Tours. At the gates of the city the king of Sicily, his son, the duke of Calabria, the dukes of Bretagne and Alençon, and a splendid retinue of nobles welcomed the envoys of Henry. On the following day they were presented to Charles, who received them at his castle of Montils, near Tours, and showed a ready anxiety to confirm the preliminaries which had already been agreed upon by his commissioners.

arrived at Tours. Shortly afterwards a treaty¹ of abstinence from war was concluded between France and England, which, although for a limited period, was intended ultimately to form the basis of a final peace. On May 24 Margaret was affianced in the church of S. Martin of Tours as the bride of the king of England, who was represented on this occasion by the marquis of Suffolk.

§ 29. A contemporaneous and unpublished account of this ceremony, drawn up by one of the English retinue, is preserved in one of the manuscripts at Oxford;² it contains some interesting details. Among other amusements, a trial of skill between the archers of France and England was agreed to at the suggestion of Suffolk and Pierre de Brézé, the chief minister in these negotiations. Contrary to what might have been anticipated the prize, 1,000 crowns, was gained by the French, they having put forward some choice marksmen selected from the Scottish guard, who had obtained letters of naturalization, and consequently were regarded as denizens of France. On 1 May, in the afternoon, the queen and the dauphiness Margaret of Scotland, accompanied by three hundred noblemen and other knightly attendants, rode into the country to collect the May and carry it home. At the feast which succeeded the betrothal the august company was entertained by the entry of two giants, carrying each a large tree in his hands. These were followed by two camels bearing towers on their backs, in each of which was an armed man, who fought the one with the other. These festivities continued until 29 May, when the English embassy returned home-wards. On Monday, June 8, the earl of Suffolk was received by the inhabitants of Rouen with the most rapturous rejoicing.¹ His route towards the coast was one continued triumphal procession.

§ 30. The intelligence of this alliance and the truce by which it was succeeded was every where received with the greatest joy. The inhabitants of the oppressed districts of France and Normandy were so sanguine as to believe that their calamities were now ended. The people, so long shut up within the fortified towns, now ventured into the country; the husbandman began to till his long-neglected land, and the tradesman resumed his interrupted business. Intercourse between the English and the French was now conducted upon more equitable terms, and their commodities were interchanged to their mutual advantage.² This kindly feeling was further strengthened by the festivities which attended the departure of the young queen to her husband's home. After the usual display of feasts and tournaments at Nancy, the royal cavalcade set out from that city, the former capital of Lorraine. It was graced by the presence of three queens, the youthful bride being accompanied by those of Sicily and France. Her father escorted her as far as Bar-le-Duc, where she was entrusted to the care of the marquis of Suffolk, who conducted her to Paris.³ A document which is given in this work here takes up the narrative and furnishes us with some interesting particulars illustrative of her proceedings until she joined her ill-fated husband in England.

§ 31. The account which is here printed contains an abstract of the expenditure incurred by the embassy sent upon the part of the royal bridegroom, and extends from 17 July 1444 to 16 October 1445. Two clerks of the king's household were entrusted with the outlay, and on their return their accounts were audited by the officers of the exchequer. In addition to 4,233*l.* 12*s.* 9*d.*, which they received from the lord treasurer, they drew 995*l.* 9*s.* 2*d.* from other sources. Their expenditure commenced on 17 March, when the queen (for Margaret had been betrothed, as we have seen, though not actually married to the king) entered the English dominions at Pontoise. The outlay is arranged under heads, the first of which relates to the offerings made by her at mass in France, Normandy, and England; and these reached only the moderate sum of 4*l.* 10*s.* She was more liberal in her private almsgiving. In her journey between Mantes and Harfleur she gave 22*s.* 4*d.* to various poor people, in addition to which she distributed fourteen dresses with hoods of grey cloth, and as many pairs of shoes to fourteen women, together with a present of fourteen pence. This benefaction took place on Maundy Thursday; the number fourteen being chosen as corresponding with the queen's age. This act of liberality cost 8*l.*

§ 32. The royal party embarked on the Seine at Mantes and proceeded to Rouen. While in that city Margaret purchased certain pieces of plate which had belonged to the cardinal of Luxemburg, lately deceased; his arms were removed from it and hers were substituted. A vessel called the Cock John was specially assigned for the personal use of the young queen, while her household embarked in another called the Mary of Hampton. They then proceeded towards England. While on the voyage between Portsmouth and Southampton, two Genoese galleys passed the royal squadron ; and seven trumpeters who were on board having serenaded the party, were presented by the queen with 23*s. 4d.*

§ 33. In addition to the retinue who accompanied Margaret from Orleans and Lorraine, the party consisted of the marquis of Suffolk, three barons, two baronesses, nine knights, two ladies, six damsels, four chaplains, fifty esquires, and 182 valets, or serving men, besides various retainers of an inferior rank.

§ 34. When the marriage ceremonial was concluded at Tichfield a strange gift was presented to the queen, namely, a lion, the keep of which, along with his travelling expenses to the Tower of London, cost the sum of 3*l. 6s. 4d.* The total outlay incurred by the embassy reaches 5,533*l. 1s. 11d.*

Journal of the French embassy to London in 1445. § 35. It had been decided by the treaty of Tours that there should be a temporary cessation of hostilities in the hope that out of such an arrangement might arise a final adjustment of the long dispute between the two nations. A truce which might be speedily followed by a renewal of hostilities upon an extended scale was no advantage. It gave the combatants time to recover their breath, to recruit their exhausted finances, to bring up new troops and stores to the future scene of action, and to nerve themselves for a prolonged struggle. It was clearly, then, for the interest of both parties that this state of uncertainty should be ended, and that a peace upon fair and reasonable terms should be concluded. Such at least was the opinion of Charles, and in furtherance of his design he sent an embassy to discuss the matter with his nephew of England. The French ambassadors kept a journal of their proceedings, and from this document, which is fortunately extant, we gain some insight into the state of the English court as it existed in the year 1445.

§ 36. The narration commences with the arrival of the French commissioners at Calais. They were there honourably received by Garter king-at-arms and the lieutenant of the town, and on the next day the archbishop of Rheims, one of their number, carried his cross and held a confirmation of the children of the inhabitants. They crossed to Dover in safety, and reached Canterbury on Monday, July 5. Early on the following morning the archbishop received a visit from the prior, who in the name of the metropolitan and the other clergy requested him to say the office for the Translation of S. Thomas, which was to be celebrated on the following day. He complied with this request, and on Wednesday celebrated mass, and after a sumptuous dinner in the prior's hall, he again officiated at vespers. Their journey was not resumed until Friday, when they arrived at Rochester; they passed Sunday at Maidstone, and on the subsequent Wednesday they entered London. Their reception was gratifying. About a league from the city they were met by the earls of Suffolk, Dorset, Salisbury, and Shrewsbury, who were followed at a short distance by the dukes of Exeter and Warwick, four bishops, and about three hundred and fifty mounted knights and esquires, "all of whom," says the narrative, "were dressed most richly in cloth of gold, and silk and goldsmiths' work, and their horses had trappings of silver gilt and goldsmiths' work, and some of cloth of gold." Crossing the bridge they entered the city, when the different guilds and companies, each in its own picturesque costume, greeted the strangers, who were conducted to their lodgings, favourably impressed with the welcome which they had experienced.

§ 37. On July 15 they had their first interview with the king. It took place at Westminster. They found him in a large hall ; he was seated on a chair covered with cloth of gold, and was dressed in a long robe of red and gold, trimmed with fur, which reached the ground. The drapery of the furniture was of blue diaper, embroidered with the livery of the late King Henry the Fifth ; it bore the representation of seed-pods and the motto Jamais. With more than questionable taste the tapestry represented a lady offering the arms of France to a lord ; the meaning of which the embassy could not fail to interpret. There was nothing objectionable, however, in the demeanour of the young king ; he came forward to meet the deputation, and uncovered his head to the count de Vendôme and the archbishop. The negociation was carried on through the English chancellor ; it extended from 15 July to the end of the month. The proceedings, which are detailed at some length, ended without any definite result ; either party being unwilling to yield to the claims of the other. The French were encouraged by the intervention of the duke of Burgundy, from whom they received more than one despatch during these proceedings. Shortly after their return the line of conduct pursued by the duke of Somerset, the governor of Normandy, gradually embittered the contending parties, until the smouldering embers burst out into an open flame, and the capture of Fougères by François de Surienne led to the results which have been detailed with so much accuracy and vigour by Blondel, an eye-witness of the strife, in the interesting volume lately published in this series of historical materials under the auspices of Sir John Romilly.

§ 38. The sources indicated in the Preface to the former volume of this work have furnished the documents contained in the present.¹ For free access to the treasures of the Imperial Library at Paris I am under increased obligations to M. Claude and M. Léopold Delisle, who with unvarying kindness aided my researches in that rich collection of historical literature. I am indebted to the courtesy of Sir Charles Young, Garter king of arms, for the use of the Arundel manuscript of Worcester's Collections, which has furnished so many curious papers to these volumes; and to the archbishop of Canterbury for access, through his Grace's librarian, the Rev. W. Stubbs, to a kindred volume now in the library at Lambeth. In the arrangement and elucidation of these documents I have derived important assistance from the recently published works of M. Vallet,² one of the professors in the École des Chartes at Paris, of M. Charles de Beaurepaire,³ keeper of the Archives at Rouen, and to M. G. Du Fresne de Beaucourt, editor of the Chronicle of Mathieu D'Escochy,⁴ whose labours, singly and collectively, throw much light upon the history of the wars of the English in France.

Lesquelles lettres contenoient deux fueilles de papier. Et par icelles lettres de nos dits seigneurs du conseil nous estoit mande que la copie ou vidimus d'icelles lettres envoyssons par les bonnes villes de notre dit bailliage, et le contenu en icelles faire exposer au peuple en sermons generaулx, et autrement, par certains notables clercs de bonne voulente, afin que le peuple peust veoir et cognoistre clerement le devoir en quoy le roy, notre dit seigneur, s'estoit mis, pour la reverence de Dieu, notre Createur, et le relievement du povre peuple, de traitier la dite paix. Le quel Guillem Bourse ait escriptes et doublees icelles lettres par sept foiz ; dont l'un d'iceulx doubles, deuement collationne a l'original des dits lettres, et seelle du grant seal aux causes du dit bailliage, a este envoyee aux bailli, bourgoiz, manans et habitans, de la ville de Dieppe, le second a ceulx du Neufchastel de Lincourt, of Hungerford, and the rest of the ambassadors of the king, our said lord, they being at Arras, written in the said place of Arras on the v. day of September last past; in which letters, written by the ambassadors aforesaid, is contained at length the matters which had been brought forward in the convention of Arras, which had met about a treaty of peace between the king, our sovereign lord, and his adversary. These letters contained two leaves of paper. And by these letters of our said lords of the council we were commanded to send a copy, or vidimus, of the same letters throughout the good towns of our said baillywick, and to cause the substance of the same to be made known to the people in public sermons, and elsewhere by certain notable clerks of good will, to the end that the people may see and understand clearly, how our lord, the king, has done his duty, out of reverence to God, our Creator, and the relief of the poor people, in treating for the said peace. The said Guillem Bourse has written and copied these letters seven times; one of which transcripts, duly collated with the original of the said letters, and sealed with the great seal used for the causes of the said bailliwick, has been sent to the bailly, burgesses, residents and inhabitants of the town of Dieppe, the second to the people of Neufchatel de Lincourt, le tiers aux colliege et bourgoiz de Gournay, le quart aux religieux et bourgoiz de Fescamp, le vme. aux bourgoiz, manans et habitans de Monstrevillier, le vj. aux cappitaine et bourgoiz de Harefleu, le viij. aux viconte, bourgoiz et habitans de Caudébec, esquelz executoires avoit xiiiij. fueilles de papier.

Item, pour avoir semblablement doublees deux autres paires de lettres closes de nos dits seigneurs du conseil a nous adre-chans, escriptes a Rouen le x. jour de ce present moys d'Octobre, ainsi signees,

“ Par les gens du conseil du roy, notre seigneur, en Normandie,

faisans mention de entretenir en chacun viconte de notre and Eng-dit bailliage lordonnaunce autresfoiz faicte, d'avoir en chacun lish troops d'icelles vicontes un chief Angloiz lance a cheval et xx. archiers in Nor-mandy. pour la conduite des gens du dit bailliage embastonnez ; laquelle ordonnaunce avoit cesse par aucun temps a executer par l'ordonnance de nos dits seigneurs, et de present ont ordonne a le remettre sus, comme les dits lettres le contiennent. Pourquoy a convenu envoyer de nouvel les executoires d'icelles

the third to the college and burgesses of Gournay, the fourth to the monks and burgesses of Fécamp, the fifth to the burgesses, residents and inhabitants of Montivilliers, the sixth to the captain and burgesses of Harfleur, the seventh to the vicomte, burgesses, and inhabitants of Caudebec ; which official copies contained xiiiij. leaves of paper.

Also, for having in like manner copied two other pairs of close letters of the lords of the council addressed to us, written at Rouen, on the x. day of this present month of October, thus signed,

“ By the members of the council of the king, our lord, in Normandy,

which mention that in each vicomté within our said bailliwick shall be observed the ordinance formerly made, namely, that in each of the said vicomtés shall be an English principal mounted lance and xx. archers, to lead the people within the said bailliwick who are provided with arms ; which ordinance by the direction of our said lords, had for some time past ceased to be put in force, but now they have decreed that it should be revived, as is contained in the said letters. In consequence whereof it has become necessary to send anew lettres, avec mandemens et commissions pour recevoir les monstres d'icelles lances et archiers aux vicontes de Caudebec, Monstrevillier, Arques, Neufchastel et Gournay, pour une viconte, et aux centeniers, l'eniers ou paix de Caux; en quoy il a falu escrire dix fueilles de papier, et en quoy il a grans escriptures. Lesquelles escriptures veues pur nous en la presence des dits procureur et conseil, avons pour ce faite taupe au dit Guillem Bourse la somme de quatre livres Tournois.

Si vous mandons que des deniers de votre dit viconte du terme Saint Michiel derrainement passe, vous paiez au dit Guillem Bourse la dite somme de iiiij. livres Tournois. Et par rapportant ces presentes, avec quittance du dit Guillem Bourse, comme vous lui aurez paie la dicte somme, ce vous sera alone en voz comptes, et rabatu de votre dicte receipte par ceux a qui il appartendra. 30 April.

Comme de nagaires nous eussions escript pluseurs lettres a noble homme, messire Jehan Fastolf, chevalier, cappitaine de Caen, faisants mention de lassemble qui avoient faite les in Noranemis et adversaires du roy pour entrer ou pais de Nor- mandy.
mendie, comme len dit; et auxi nous eussent escript noble et puissant seigneur, monseigneur de Scalles, grant seneschal de Normandie, et ce dit cappitaine, autres lettres que lour feissons savoir souvent lestat et puissance des dits ennemis, les lieux ou ilz soient, et les chemins quilz tendroient, affin de resister a leur entreprisnes, les quelles noz lettres eussent este portees de la ville d'Essey en la ville de Caen, et celles de notre dit seigneur de Scalles, et du dit messire Jehan Fastolf

[TRANSLATION.]

To all those persons who shall see these present letters,
William Oldhalle, knight, baily of Alençon, greeting.

Whereas of late we have written many letters to the noble man, messire Jehan Fastolf, knight, captain of Caen, making mention of the gathering which had been made by the enemies and adversaries of the king, with the intention of entering upon the country of Normandy, as it is reported; and also whereas the noble and powerful lord, my lord of Scales, grand seneschal of Normandy, and the said captain, have written to us other letters requiring us to send frequent intimation to them of the condition and force of the said enemies, the places where they are, and the roads they are taking, in order that their enterprises may be resisted, which letters of ours had to be conveyed from the town of Essai to the town of Caen, and those of our said lord of Scales, and of the said messire

apportees du dit lieu de Caen devers nous au dit lieu d'Essey par Nicolas Clare, Anglois, lequel en portant icelles lettres eust fait deux voyages du dit lieu d'Essey au dit lieu de Caen hastivement de nuit et de jour ; et pour iceulx faire, par notre mandement lui eussent este bailliez et delivrez, ou fait bailler et delivrer, en la ville d'Argenthal par Richard Salins, viconte du dit lieu, deux chevaux, lun appartenant a Nicolas Hok, Anglois, et lautre appartenant a Michel Cussalley ;—savoir faisons que au jour duv, darrain jour Davril, lan mil iiiij.c. xxxvj. se presentent devant nous les dits Nicolas Hok et Cussalley, requerans que pour les journées de leurs dits chevaux, qui avoient vacques en faisant les dits voyages chacun deux jours, et empirement des dits chevaux unt alocacion diceulx voyages, leurs voulssions faire tauxacion et pourvoir de paiement ainsi que de raison. Pourquoy nous feismes venir devant nous plusieurs notables personnes, bourgeois et demourans en la ville d'Argenthal, lesquelx disont avoir veu baillir et livrer les dits chevaux au dit Clare pour faire les dits voyages, et auxi disont les avoir veuz alors quils les avoir renduz et bailliez a son retour des dits voyages, les quelx nous feismes jurer et enchargasmes de rapporter verite

John Fastolf, had to be conveyed from the said place of Caen to the said place of Essai, by Nicolas Clare, Englishman, who, in conveying the said letters, has made two journeys from the said place of Essai to the place of Caen aforesaid, hastily, travelling by night and day ; and to do this, there were given and delivered to him by our command, or there were caused to be given and delivered to him, in the town of Argentan, by Richard Salins, vicomte of the said place, two horses, the one belonging to Nicolas Hok, Englishman, and the other belonging to Michael Cusalley ;—we make known that upon this day, being the last day of April, in the year one thousand iiiij.c. xxxvj., the said Nicolas Hok and Cusalley presented themselves before us, asking that, for the days' work of their said horses, which have each been employed two days in making the said journeys, and also for the damage done to the said horses by occasion of the said journeys, we would be pleased to make an award and provide reasonable payment for the same. Wherefore we caused to come before us several respectable persons, burgesses and residents in the said town of Argentan, who said that they had seen the said horses given and deliyered to the said Clare to make the journeys aforesaid, and also said that they had seen them when they were restored and given up, upon his return from the said journeys, which persons we caused to be en leurs conosciences sur savoir combien il povait bien appartenir par raison aus dits Hok et Cussalley des journees de leurs dits chevaux et empirements ensi en iceulx a icelle cause, lesquelz nous rapporterent en leurs conosciences que il lour povait bien appartenir par raison a chacun la somme de vingt soulz Tournois, qui vallent pour tout la somme de quarante soulz Tournois. Veu lequel rapport ainsi fait, et auxi atendu la necessite hastive quil estoit de porter les dits lettres, donne sur ce en mandement au dit viconte d'Argenthal, que la ditte somme de xl.s. Tournois des deniers de sa recepte il face paiement aus dits Hok et Cussalley, chacun en son regard; en prenant quittance deulx, et de ce faisant mencion sur ses comptes, ainsi quil est acoustume ou tel cas.

Donne au dit lieu d'Argenthal, en lan et jour dessus dits.

(Dorso.) Lan mil cccc. xxxvj., le premier jour de May, par devant moy, Jehan Biart, cleric, tabellion du roy, notre seigneur, ou siege d'Argenthal, furent presens Nicolas Clare, Anglois, et Michiel Cussalley, denommez au blanc, lesquelz confessent sworn, and charged them to speak the truth upon their conosciences, that it might be known how much should fairly and reasonably be given to the aforesaid Hok and Cussalley for the work of their said horses, and for the injury which they have consequently sustained; and they reported to us, upon their conosciences, that there might well and reasonably be awarded to each of them the sum of twenty sols, Tournois, which amounts, in all, to the sum of forty sols, Tournois. Having regard to this report thus made, and also taking into consideration the necessity that there was for a speedy despatch of the said letters; we have hereupon given orders to the said vicomte of Argenthal that, out of the money which he has on hand, he make payment of the said sum of xl.s., Tournois, to the said Hok and Cusalley, each for his own share; taking an acquittance from them, and making mention of the same in his accounts, as in such case is usual.

Dated at the same place of Argentan, in the year and day above specified.

(Dorso.) In the year one thousand cccc. xxxvj. the first day of May, before me, Jehan Biart, clerk, notary of the king, our lord, at the siege of Argentan, were present Nicolas Clare, Englishman, and Michael Cusalley, named in the warrant, who acknowledged that they have had and received of Richart avoir eu et receu de Richart Saling, esquier, viconte d'Argenthen et d'Exmes, la somme de quarante soulz, Tournois, par qui deubz leur estoient; cest assavoir, a chacun vingt soulz, Tournois, pour les causes contenues et desclaeres au dit blanc. De la quelle somme de xl.s. Tournois les dits Nicolas Hok et Cussalley quittent le roy, notre seigneur, le dit viconte, et tous autres a qui quittance en appartient.

Tesmoing, le signe de moy, tabellion dessus dit, cy mis le jour et an dessus dit.

Saling, esquire, vicomte of Argentan and of Exmes, the sum of forty solz, Tournois, of the person by whom they were due to them; that is to say, to each of them twenty sols, Tournois, for the reasons contained and declared in the said warrant. Of which sum of 40s. Tournois, the said Nicolas Hok and Cusalley acquit the king, our lord, the said vicomte, and all other persons to whom an acquittance is due.

In witness whereof, here is the signature of me, the notary above said, placed hereto on the day and year above said.

Questions submitted to Henry the Sixth by Richard, earl of Warwick, respecting the government of France and Normandy ; with the king's answers thereto.¹

A.D. 1437. HENRICUS, Dei gratia rex Angliae et Franciae et dominus
 11 May. — Hiberniae, omnibus ad quos præsentes litteræ pervenerint, Agreement salutem.

as to the Inspximus quosdam articulos nobis per carissimum et fide-govern- lem consanguineum nostrum, Ricardum comitem Warwici, ad-
 ment of France and ministratos, ac responsiones eorumdem articulorum per nos Normandy datas, in hæc verba.

by the earl First, sithen it hath liked your highness to wille and desire of War- me to doe you service in youre realme of France and duchee wick. of Normandie, as your lieutenant there, like it unto your grace that I may be answered in my demands off certain articles following, as well longing for the weel and conservation of your lordships and lands on that side, as to have your good and gracious answer in other articles following, longeyng to my self; the which I trust to God shall not be thought unto your highness unreasonable, considering that it may wele be conceived of reason in youre good lordship that my said going over at this time is full farre from the ease of my years and from the continuall laboure off my person att seiges and daily occupation in the warre, seeing the lenght off tyme that I have belaboured in the service off nobull kings off good memory, your grandsire and fadere, and about youre self, as well in youre warrs as about your noble person.

Item. What power and auctoritie it like your highness that I should have in exercising the said service?

Responsio. The king will that you have as large and ample power as the duke off Yorke had; useing hit after the forme of an instruction that shall be given thereupon unto him.

Item. To wete what puisance off men of armes and archers, and what paiment, shall be sent overe at this present armie?

Responsio. He shall have paiment for iij. c. speers and the bows theretoo, that shall goo with him, and the viij. c. speers
 and the bowes theretoo that beth beyond the sea shall be paid and contented in monoye and merchandise there.

Item. To know what estate it like you of youre grace that I shall have for my person?

Responsio. The king will that he have yearly, for his estate, during such his absence, xx. m. frankes, and to be about his person xxx. speers and the bowes theretoo.

Item. To weite in what wise, and for how long, it shall like your seid highness to purvey for your lande there at this time?

Responsio. The king hath appointed at this time provision for the keeping of the land for a yere and an half; and before the end thereof to purvey therefore for the time to come as the necessity shall require, in the manner and fourme conteigned more at large in an acte by the kings commandment maade on the same, remaignyng in the king's counsail.

Item. That the lords that be sent after, that is to say, Beaumont, Willoughby, and Bourgchier, mowe be entretede to doe youre highnesse service in this present armie, or at least ij. of hem.

Responsio. Willoughby is agreed to goe, and another shall be entreted to goe also.

Item. If it like your highness, I desire to have certain stuff of artillerie; that is to say, for iiiij. m. bowes and x. m. sheafe of arrowes, iiij. c. groce of strings, and a m. spere shafts; and that it like youre seid highness to purvey stuff off gonnes, gonme powdere, stones and other artillerie and habilliments for the warre, such as shall think unto youre lordship necessarie and sufficient for the defence and safeguarde off youre townes and castles in your said reaume and duchee.

Responsio. The king sent over bot late agoe by Glocestere grete stuff of such necessaries and habilliments for the werre, the which he supposest beth not as yet spended; and over that, my said lord off Warwicke shall have with him xv. c. bowes and iij. m. shefs of arrows, a c. groce off strings, iiij. c. spere shafs; and moo spere shafs may be purveyed in Normandie, whereof the prices be better there than here. And as towards gonnes, the king is not advised to spare any from hence. Matter for powder he shall have xl. c. with him, and stones he may have in Normandy; and he shall have more off the abovesaid things from tyme to tyme as the cas shall require.

Item. That all manner off procese made, or to be made, against me, your seid humble liege man, in your Exchequier, for apprestes, whatever they be, waiges of warre, receipt, relief, commissions made to me and to oþere not returned, nor thestretes thereof brought into Exchequier, al other processes made, or to be made, against me in the foresaid Exchequier, except the sommons of the Pipe for yerely fermes which I owe to pay to you, be put in respite for the time of my seid abiding in your service; and thereupon warrantes under your prive or grete seal, as the case shall require, be maad sufficient from tyme to tyme, direct to the tresorore and barons for the time being, to respite the seid processes and to surceste in making of hem during the seid time.

Responsio. Hit is granted.

Item. That if any lordships, manoures, lands or tenements holden of you in chief descend, remaigne, revert, or in any wise falle unto [me] afore my coming home into this reaume, that after the inquisition thereoff returned in the chancellarie in the fourme accustomed, I may have lyverie off hem at suyt off one off my generall atournes, afore myne homage done unto you, if any be due therefore; and that the seid homage, and all process to be maad therefore, be respited unto my coming agen into this land, without fyne making for the same respite.

Responsio. Hit is granted.

Item. If I die in youre seid service, or be soo letted by sickness, or other cause ageynst my will, soo that I may nocht performe fully your content touching the seid service duryng the terme that I shall be withholden fore, that nether I, nor myne heres, ne executors, be not compelled to restore the moneye the which I shal receive of you for my self and my retinue bycause of your seid service, nor noon account to make thereoff in any wise.

Responsio. Hit is granted as it is desired; provided alway that if the caas so happen that he die, (that God forbide!) before the end of the terme of his withholding, and that after his death any off his retinue within the seid terme withdraw him, that in that caas his executors shall make, att the kings cost, the suyts to the kings behove ageynst him that so withdrewd him.

Item. That it like your highness to grant to me, or to other persons by me hereafter to be named, your letters pattentes off lycence in due forme under your grete seal, without fyn, to give and grant to the dane and chapitres off the church collegiatt off Our Lady off Warwick, lands, tenements, or other possessions, to the yerely value off xl.l. over all charges and reprises, and the same dean and chapiter to receive the same lands and tenements, or other possessions, to have and to hold to hem and to her successors for evermore, to fynd, sustain and augment divine service in the same churche, and to praye for the good estate of you and other that they be bound to pray for, after the ordinance of me, or of other persons of me to be named.

Responsio. The king hath graunted this as it is desired.

Item. Forasmuch as there is due unto me certain sommes of moneye, as for monie lente and service doon unto you, ye being in your reaume of Fraunce; that is to say, for moneye that I borowed for the safeguarde of Meaulx, xj.c. vj.l. xiij.s. iiiij.d., also for the wages of xx. speres and lx. bowes for two moneths, the time of your coronation in France, an c. iiiij^{xx} xix.l., and by a bill of debenture of Hotoftes, that time tresorer of the warres, as it appeereth by the seid debenture, an c. iiiij^{xx} xvij.l. vij.s. iij.d. ob., I beseech you that I may have paiment in hand off the seid sommes, the which amounteth in all the some of xv. c. iiiij.l. vij.d. ob., to the end to make me ready to doe your highnesses service within this present viage, and considering that it is trewe duete unto me that I ask.

Responsio. The king wole that off the sommes abovesaid my seid lord of Warrwicke have a m^l marc in hand, and that for remenant off the seid sommes over the seid m^l marc that he have sufficient assignment; or else for the same sommes there be laid and delivered unto him, for his suretee thereof, certain of the kings joiaulx to wedde for the space of iij. yere from the feste off S. Michell next, and that thereupon there be maade a warrant to the tresorere and chamberlains to paie and assigne, or else to leye to wedde as above.

Item. That there is as due unto me and my souldeours a grete and notable somme off moneye for the safeguard off your town of Challeys, the tyme that I was capitain there, I beseech you that be any off your counsail it like your highnesse to purvey some way how I shall mowe rathest neghe payment, or agreement, of the said somme.

Responsio. The king considereth well by the report of my said lord that, as he saith, there is and shall be founde due unto him for the foresaid cause the summ off v.m^l. c.lxxv.l. ix.s. xj.d. ob., and for the same cause to his said souldiours the summ off vij.m^l. cccc.iiij.^{xx}l. xvij.s. iij.d. is also and shall be found due by the king, the names off the which souldiours, and also the sommes off moneye that beth due unto everich of hyem, my said lord wol doo the king to be certified be credible writing, to the intent that he shall mowe entret hem for theire duty in that party as that him shall seem most best and prouitable for his availe; and also the king considereth that my said lord hath graunted to release unto him, off the abovesaid some of v. M^l c. lxxv. l. ix. s. xj. d. the some of M^l. l. on the condicion that off the remenant off his seid duee he may have payment, or sufficient assigement, for somoche the king will and commandeth that there be made a warrant sufficient under his privie seal, directed to the tresorer and chamberleins of his Exchequer, commanding him that my said lord, releasing a M^l. l. unto the king of such somes off moneye as beth and shall be founde due unto him for the cause byforsaid, that off the remenant off the same sommes, that soo beth and shall be founde due unto him over the seid M^l. l., they doe make unto him paiment, or sufficient assigement, off such good as shall growe and come unto the kings use.

Item. That if any off the appointments maad here by you, our soveraigne lord, be any off your counsaile be broken, and ye certified and notified thereof, that I may in such caas then be free to return agene into this reaume with your good lordship, without any charge or blame to be laid upon me therefore, in any wise; beseeching furthermore your said highness theese said matters aforesaid longing to the wele and conseruation of your lands and lordships to have for your ounwele and tenement so recommanded that they be likeliod off mannes reason stand and abide in your obeisance; for elles it should cause you a grete dispence off good at this time and not the conclusion that ye desire, which God defende! Wherefore I beseech youre good lordship in my most humble wise to abbridge myne answers in the demands abovesaid; and elles accepting my trew devoir and acqutable hold me fully for excused that I dare not aventure so grete a losse as might fall to you, and to me also, off my poor worship.

Responsio. If there be lack off any off the covenants unto my said lord of Warwick, he may send unto the king and certifie thereof for to purvey therefore, and after such certificate, if that the king purvey not in that partie within vj. wekes after that he is so certified, if that wynde and weder lete it not, that then it may be lewfull for him to returne, without charge or blame to be laid upon him in any wise; and if the caas happen, the king holdeth him fore discharged, and so dischargeth him.

Memorandum, that sire Johne Popham, tresorere of the kyngges hous, departed fro Londone the xix. day of Marche, the 3ere of the kynge the xvijth, to goe into Normandy to my lorde of Warwyke, and also into Brethayne to the duke of Brethayne, for certane trete to be made with the Bastarde of Orlyance, and othir of the duke of Orlyance councelle, and also with othiere ymbassettors of the Frenche parte, like as it shewithe playnely by the instruccions 3evine of oure soverein lorde the kynge unto the saide sir Johne Popham. In the wheche bysenees and labors aforesaid sir Johne Popham was occupite unto the xxij. day of Juin next folowying, that he come to Churboro for to have comme home to Engelonde to have made relacione to the kynge how he had done in that matere that he was sende fore, whereas he recevede the same day ij. Pryve Seles fro the kyng, by the wheche the kyng commaundet hym to abyde styll in that contre the comynge over of certane of hys councelle, the whiche he wolde sende over, that the foresaide Johne Popham and thay sholde labor in grete and chargeable maters for the kynge in that contre, like as is shewede more playnly by the saide letters of the Pryve Ceille. And so he aboode there and at Roone for the comynge of thayme that the kynge sholde sende thedere, like as he was commaundet by the Pryve Ceilles, unto the xxvij. day of August next folowynge, the whiche thyme maister Johne Raynylle come thedere out of Engelonde fro the kynge, and told hymme that there sholde comme no manne out of Engelonde, like as the kynge hadde wrytyn by the Pryve Ceilles; but broȝte

a new comicione fro the kynge unto the foresaide Sir John Popham, by the wheche the kyng ordeynte hym and othur for to bygynne a new trete withe the Dolfynes parte for a trew to bytakyn bytwyx the kynge and the saide Dolfyne, like as the kyng wrote more playnly to my lorde of Warwyke and to the Chaunceeler of Fraunce, and as shewethe playnle by the dowble comicione. Whereupon my saide lorde of Warwyke and the Chaunceller wretene in alle hast to the bastarde of Orlyance and othur of the Dolfynes councelle, praying thame to send theme word of the disposicione of the Dolfyne in that mater, and where and whene the ymbassitores mighthe asymble for to trete opone the foresaide trew, like as the duke of Orlyance hadde byhyȝte the kyng. Whereopone the Bastarde wrote unto my lorde of Warwyke aȝane and let hym wette that he hadde spokyne with the saide Dolfyne of thys mater, and that the saide Dolfyn wolde geve non answeare without avice of councelle, and that he wolde in alle hest take avice of hys councelle, and thereopone the foresaide Bastarde wold send to my lorde of Warwyke a playne answhere in the mater; the whiche answhere come not to my lorde of Warwyke nor to the foresaide Sir Johne Popham unto the last day of Septembre, the wheche day there comme letters fro the saide bastarde of Orlyance, the wheche were wrytyn the xx. day of Septembre at Bloysz, like as it ys shewede playnly by the dowbles of the letters that the Dolfyn, the wheche that he callethe ys kynge, hadde takyn avice of thys mater by hys councelle, and wolde not in noo wyse trete of trew neither of peisse unto the thyme he hadde sende hys ymbassadors into Engelonde to the duke of Orlyance, and that he hadde answeare agane fro hym. Wherefore my lorde of Warwyke and the Chaunsseller of France and othure of the kyngges councille at Roone thoȝtone that the tarryyng there of the saide sir Johne Popham was nedfulle no longure; wherefore as sone as [he] mighthe by delyvered of thame there and at Roone, he shope hymme into Engelondewarde in the goodliest hast that he might, and sped hymme in seche wyse that, blest by God, he comme to Londone agene the xx. day of October last past, the whiche amownthe that the foresaide sir Johne Popham hath byne out in that viage in the kyngges serves for to accompte fro the xix. day of Marche that last was, that he departede fro Londone, unto the xx. day of October that last was, that he comme agane to Londone, cc. dayes and xvij.

Pourquoy desirons auttant, et plus que paravant, que notre dit beau frere veigne en la bonne ville de Paris ; ou se nous, nostre beau frere le duc de Bretagne, ou lun¹ de nous, ne puisse etre ou aller au dit lieu de Paris par exoine de maladie, ou autrement, en autre ville de ca Paris, aussi pres ou plus pres que nest Paris, ou nous et luy aviseros etre convenable, afin que par son moyen et avisement public good of the realm of France, and with a view to employ himself in the good and preservation of the lordship of the same, he would be pleased to come to my lord the king and us ; and since the departure of the said ambassadors, my said lord the king has departed from this life, in consequence of which there is still greater necessity than ever to provide for the government of the same, for which government the presence of our said good brother of Bretagne is very advantageous. Wherefore we desire as much, and more than hitherto, that our said good brother should come to the good city of Paris ; or if we, or our good brother the duke of Bretagne, or either of us, cannot be in, or go to, the said place of Paris, by reason of sickness or otherwise, in some other city on this side Paris, as near, or nearer, than Paris is, where we and he shall agree upon as fitting ; in order that by his means and

And since we have heard that there are some persons in his country who, not being well informed respecting the friendship and goodwill which exist between us and him, have been somewhat apprehensive that he might incur some peril or danger, or his people and goods, which should be in the said journey, that they might be compelled to make some promises or grants contrary to their inclination and will; and also that some others of his country, whom he might bring with him, might arm themselves against the opposite side, and some exploits be done by which they are apprehensive that they might be injured in body or goods; although we are persuaded that on all those points our said good brother has no apprehension, nevertheless to satisfy the fears above-mentioned, and other suspicious opinions and imaginations, which people might surmise in this matter, and to show our good intention in regard to these fears and conjectures, “ Pour ce icy, par deux quitances de lui faites, la premiere le xxij. jour de Janvier, cccc. xxij., et lautre le xvij. jour de Mars ensuivant, cy rendus.

To . . . monseigneur Raoul le Saige, knight, councillor of the king our lord, to whom have been paid, by the said receiver-general of the finances of the said receipt, the sum of ij. c. lxij. livres Tournois, for xlij. days which he states that he has employed in a journey by him made, by the direction of my said lord the regent, along with the other councillors of the king and of my said lord, from the city of Rouen to Amiens, and thence into Pontieu, to Crotoy and elsewhere, to be present and assist at a certain meeting held in the said place of Amiens by my lord the regent, and monseigneur the duke of Burgundy, for various great matters touching the honor, the good, and the profit of the king and of his realm ; the said days commencing on the last day of January, one thousand cccc.xxij., and ending on the xij. day of March following, both included, at the rate of vj. livres Tournois, to him allowed for each day that he shall be on his journey, for the business and affairs of the king, as is said above.

“ Wherefore here, by two acquittances by him made, the first on the xxij. day of January, cccc. xxij., and the other the xvij. day of March following, here given up.

Et le tiers, de Paris a Troyes, pour le mariage de mon dit seigneur, ou nous avons vacque par lespace de xxv. jours entiers, commencans le iiiij. jour de May ensuivant.

Lesquelz font xlvi. jours entiers, au pris de deux nobles par jour, a nous tauxes par mon dit seigneur le regent, qui est le double de noz gaiges ordinaires; le noble, compte pour xlvi. s. Tournois. De la quelle somme de ij. c. ij. £i. x. s. Tournois nous nous tenons pour content, et en quittions le roy, mon dit seigneur, le regent, le dit receveur-general et tous autres.

En tesmoing de ce, nous avons seelle ces presentes de Date. notre seel et signe de notre main, le iij^{me}. jour de Juillet, lan mil, cccc., vint et trois.¹

Ita est,
R. ABBAS MONTIS.

And the third, from Paris to Troyes, for the marriage of my said lord, on which we were employed for the space of xxv. whole days, beginning on the iiiij. day of May following.

The which make xlvi. entire days, at the rate of two nobles by the day, to us allowed by my said lord the regent, which is double our ordinary wages, the noble computed at xlvi. s. Tournois. Of the which sum of ij. c. ij. £i. x. s. Tournois we hold ourselves content, and thereof we acquit the king, my said lord, the regent, the said receiver-general, and all others.

In testimony whereof, we have sealed these presents with our seal and signed them with our hand, the iiiij. day of July, in the year one thousand, cccc. twenty and three.

So it is,
R. ABBAS MONTIS.

¹ The remainder of the receipt from this point is in the autograph of the abbot.

Lesquelx xlv. jours nous affermons avoir vacquez es dits trois voyaiges.

time have come into this realm, under the charge and leading of our said cousins of Douglas and of Buchan, the which ships were hired for a certain time, as appears by the letters of hire hereupon made ; and in consequence of the dangers and accidents of the sea, which may occur at any time, we, being apprehensive that not only our said cousin of Buchan and the ambassadors, but also the said ships, might be detained by contrary winds, or otherwise, longer than the said term agreed upon with the masters of the said fleet ; and lest by default of payment, or good security for the same, the masters would not return hither should it happen that they were compelled to remain longer than the said term, have given power to our said cousin and the ambassadors to treat afresh with the said masters respecting the hire of the said ships, and to bind us to them for their payment, if it should so happen that they should remain longer than the said term, which event has happened. And in consequence of this our said cousins and ambaxadeurs obligie en grans sommes de deniers a les paier yceulx maistres xxxij. jours apres ce quilz seroient arrivez en ce royaume es pays a nous obeissans, lequel terme est desja passe, et neantmoins pour les grans affaires que nous avons a present, navons pu paier ce qui du estoit aus diz maistres, mais leur avons fait requerir que ilz voulissent attendre leur dit paiement jusques a la feste Saint Michiel prouchain venant, et que les peines contenues es dits lettres obligatoires neussent aucun cours jusques au dit terme de Saint Michiel, ce quilz ont accorde bien et voulentiers, parmi ce que nous leur avons promis de confermer, ratifier, et approuver toutes et chacunes les obligations a eulx faites par nos diz cousin et ambaxadeurs, et nous obligier de leur faire baillier bonnes et seures assignations jusques a la somme a eulx due pour leur paientment, et de ycelles faire cueillir et lever a noz propres coustz et despens ; et en outre que ou cas que faulte

ambassadors have bound us in great sums of money to be paid to these masters xxxij. days after they shall have arrived in this realm in the districts which are obedient to us, which term is already passed, and nevertheless, in consequence of the great business that we have at present, we have not been able to pay what was due to the said masters, but we have caused a request to be made to them that they would be pleased to wait for their said payment until the feast of Michaelmas next coming, and that the penalties contained in the said letters obligatory should have no force until the said term of Michaelmas, which they have granted well and willingly, provided that we would promise them to confirm, ratify, and approve all and each the bonds to them made by our said cousin and the ambassadors, and oblige ourselves to cause good and sure assignations to be given to them to the extent of the sum to them due for their payment, and to cause them to be collected and levied at our own proper costs and expenses ; and moreover, that in case there were any default

y auroit au dit terme de Saint Michiel, en toute ou en partie, nous serions d'accord que les peines contenues es dits obligacions faictes par nos dits cousin et ambaxadeurs eussent adonques cours pour la part et portion qui leur en seroit deu ; savoir faisons que, considere les grans services qui nous ont ainsi fait les diz maistres et ceulx du dit navire, nous, par ladvis et deliberation de notre conseil, leur avons accorde et ratifie, accordons et ratiffions, toutes les choses dessus dites.

Et premierement, louons, ratiffions et accordons toutes et chascunes les obligacions ainsi faictes aus dits maistres par noz diz cousin et ambaxadeurs, lesquelles nous voulons tenir de point en point, le dit terme de Saint Michiel venu, tant au regard du principe que des peines en cas de faute de paiement total. Et se faulte y avoit en aucune partie seulement, nous voulons les dits peines avoir cours pro rata, selon le portion qui seroit deue.

at the said term of Michaelmas, in the whole or in part, we should agree that the penalties contained in the said obligations made by our said cousin and ambassadors should then have effect as regards that part and portion which thereupon should be due to them :—we made known that, considering the great services which the said masters and those of the said fleet have thus rendered us, we, by the advice and deliberation of our council, have granted and ratified to them, and do grant and ratify, all the things which follow.

And in the first place, we approve, ratify, and grant all and each of the bonds thus made to the said masters by our said cousin and ambassadors, which we are willing to observe from point to point upon the arrival of the said term of Michaelmas, as well as regards the principal as the penalties, in the event of the failure of the entire payment. And if there be a failure in some part only, we are willing that the said penalties should have effect pro rata, according to the portion which should be due.

Et aussi leur avons promis et accorde, promettons et accordons, faire baillier bonnes et seures assignations pour le recouvrement de ce qui leur est deu, et les faire cueillir et lever a noz propres coustz et despens, et porter a La Rochelle au dit terme de Saint Michiel, pour destribuer a chacun de sa part et portion ; cest a scavoir,—

VERY DEAR AND GREAT FRIEND,

WE have known that, although many and divers times our very dread lord, my lord the duke of Bedford, regent of the realm of France, has at many times sent and written to you by his letters, that you would cause certain bulwarks to be made, which it has been decided should be made, in the castle, tower, and gate of Verneuil ; nevertheless you have delayed so to do, which has become to you a great imputation. And, considering the nearness of the enemies, and the subtle dealings and deceptive means which they employ, by treason and otherwise, it is probable that very great damage may therefrom arise, unless provision be made with very great diligence. And because at present there

From this it appears that, notwithstanding the statements contained in this document, the auditors still objected. The king, the duke of Burgundy, and John Abonnel executed the letters required of them, but the difficulties were not removed, the entry was not allowed, and was cancelled. Which money, amounting to xx. m. pounds Tournois, has been previously placed and employed by the said receiver-general in the Expense of this account, in the chapter of "Money given to officers and others," for which he is accountable. But on account of the reasons written on that entry it has been cancelled. And therefore, by virtue of the letters royal obtained by the said receiver-general since that time, the said entry has here been resumed in the following manner.

To my lord the duke of Burgundy, count of Flanders, of Artois, and of Burgundy, to whom, by agreement made in the city of Paris in the month of July, one thousand, cccc. xxix. at the time of this present account, for, and in the name of the king, our lord, between my lord the duke of Bedford, governor and regent of the kingdom of

And because it was a thing impossible for the said receiver-general of Normandy to take and inspect the musters, to make the payments and take his acquittances from the said men-at-arms and bowmen who were assembled in many and different parts of the lands of the said lord the duke of Burgundy, as well in Picardy and Flanders, as in Burgundy and the other borders, as they were accus-

The said Pierre Surreau, receiver-general of Normandy, after the deliverance of the said xx. m. francs by him made to the said Jehan Abonnel, as has been said, has obtained letters from the king, our said lord, dated the vj. day of August following in the said year m. cccc. xxix. addressed to the keepers of his accounts, treasurers and governors of his finances of France and of Normandy, by which letters, after a statement of the things above mentioned has been made, it was commanded and expressly enjoined that, upon the production of the said letters, the letters of my said lord of Burgundy respecting the command as to the deliverance of the said xx. m. francs to the said Abonnel, and these of the said Abonnel for the receipt of this sum, there be allowed in his Expenditure of the accounts of the said receiver-general the said sum of xx. m. francs, without any contradiction or difficulty. By virtue of which royal letters,

But because the commissioners appointed by the king, our said lord, to audit in the city of Rouen the said account, the former and the two other following accounts of the said receiver-general, did not consider as sufficient the mandate of the king, or of my said lord the governor and regent of France, made to the said receiver-general, to give the said xx. m. francs to the said Jehan Abonnel, as it is above mentioned, and because they were by no means certified of diligence or pursuit having been made by the said receiver-general in regard to my said lord of Burgundy and Abonnel for having and obtaining from them sufficient acquittal of the said xx. m. frances, as they had promised, and as they were

Wherefore the said Pierre Surreau, receiver-general, before the closing hereof, has since obtained from the king, our said lord, other letters of relief, dated at Paris, the xiiij. day of January, m. cccc. xxix. addressed to the above mentioned commissioners and to the commissioners ordained for the closing of the audit of the said accounts at the said place of Rouen which are past at the relation of my said lord the regent and governor of the kingdom, by which a recital having been made, and on account

Item, to Raoulin Meriel, for having carried from Longueville to Caudebec and Montivilliers, to the said vicomtes, commands from us, to cause carts, trucks, and other carriages to come about the causeway made below the said castle of Torcy, which was broken, xx. sols Tournois.

Item, to the said Fillaistre, for having taken letters from the said monsieur de Brinkeley and us to the lords of the council of the king, our lord, at Rouen, for the said cause, xx. sols Tournois.

Item, to Pierre de Briligny, for having carried closed letters from the said Torcy to Calais, from my said lord of Brinkeley and us to our said lords of the great council of our lord the king, for the good of the siege, ix. sols Tournois.

Item, au dit poursuivant, le xxij^e jour de ce present mois de Juing, pour aller au dit Calaiz porter lettres de nous devers monseigneur le cardinal Dangleterre et de nos diz seigneurs du grant conseil, pour pourveoir a ce que certains Anglois, qui estoient logiez sur le pays du dit bailliage, fussent envoyez hors dicellui, pour les maux quilz y commettoient, ix. sols Tournois.

Lesquelles sommes, qui montent en somme toute a seize livres Tournois, nous certifions avoir este paiez aux dessus dits messaigiers par le dit Golduit, par notre commandement et ordonnance.

Si vous mandons que la dite somme de xvij. livres Tournois vous paiez et delivriez au dit Golduit des deniers de votre recepte ; et par rapportant les pre-sentes, avec quittance souffisant du dit Golduit, comme vous lui aurez paie la dite somme, ce vous sera alloue en vos comptes et rebatu de votre recepte par ceulx ou il appartendra.

Item, to the said poursuivant, the xxij. day of this present month of June, for going to the said Calais to carry letters from us to my lord the cardinal of England, and from our said lords of the great council, to arrange that certain English who were lodged in the country of the said bailliwick should be sent away from the same, on account of the ills which they had committed there, ix. sols Tournois.

These sums, which amount in all to sixteen pounds Tournois, we certify to have been paid to the above-mentioned messengers by the said Golduit, by our com-mand and appointment.

Wherefore we command you that the said sum of xvij. pounds Tournois you shall pay and deliver to the said Golduit from the money of your receipt ; and by bringing these presents, along with a sufficient acquittance from the said Golduit that you have paid him the said sum, this shall be allowed you in your accounts, and struck off from your receipt by those to whom it shall belong to do so.

Mon tres redoubte seigneur, je tieng bien estre en vostre noble memoire et de ceulx de vostre conseil, comme a vostre grante requeste je me suis emploie ou fait de vostre guerre de France; et de mon coste et de ma part ai fait et accompli jusque a ores ce quil accorde et promis avoie par lendenture faite entre tres reverend pere en Dieu, mon tres cher et tres ame oncle, le cardinal Dangleterre, de nom de vous, dune part, et de moy d'autre. Et est vray que a ceste

[TRANSLATION.]

My very redoubtable lord, I recommend myself to you as much and as humbly as I possibly can.

My very redoubtable lord, I am fully persuaded that it is your noble memory, and in that of those of your council, how at your urgent request I have employed myself in the business of your war of France; and on my side and my part I have done and accomplished until this present time all that I have agreed and promised by the indenture made between the very reverend father in God, my very dear and well-beloved uncle, the cardinal of England in your name, on the one part, and of myself on the other. And it is true that on this occasion all my lands, occasion tous mes pais, tant de Bourgongne comme des marches de Picardie, ont este et sont en guerre et en voye de destruction, et aussi ma conte de Namur pour la plus grant partie destruite, comme il est notoire. Avecques ce, est vray que a vostre requeste et par vostre ordonnance je suis ale devant vostre ville de Compiengne, ja soit ce que lavis de moy et de ceulx de mon conseil ne fust pas tel, ains nous sembloit plus expedient de moy tirer a Crayl et Laonnois, ainsi que apparoir puet par les avis sur ce bailliez, envoiez a Calais par maistre Jehan Milet, vostre secretaire.

Est vray aussi, mon tres redoubte seigneur, que, par appointement fait depar vous avecques mes gens, (cest assavoir, les seigneurs de Santes et du Mesnil, et le provost de Saint Omer,) vous deviez paier pour chacun mois pour le paiement de mes gens estans devant la ditte ville de Compiengne, la somme de dix neuf mille cinq cent frans, monnoie royal, et aussi deviez paier lartillerie ; et avecques ce, beau cousin le

as well those of Burgundy as in the marches of Picardy, have been and are at war and on the road to destruction, and also my comté of Namur is for the most part destroyed, as is well known. It is true, moreover, that at your request and by your appointment I went before your town of Compiègne, although my own opinion and that of my council was not to do so, but it seemed to us more expedient that I should go to Creil and the Laonnois, as may also appear by the advice hereupon given, which was sent to Calais by master Jehan Milet, your secretary.

It is also true, my very redoubtable lord, that an agreement made on your part with my agents (that is to say, the lords of Santes and du Mesnil, and the provost of Saint Omer), you ought to pay during each month for the payment of my men who are before the said town of Compiègne, the sum of nineteen thousand five hundred francs of royal money, and also you ought to pay the artillery ; and, moreover, my good cousin the earl of Hun-conte Hontenton et sa compaignie devoient demourer de lez moy en mes gens devant la ditte ville de Compiengne.

Et est vray que, soubz consideration ainsi deust estre fait de vostre part, et mesmement que le dit paiement deust estre fait et entretenu sans y faillir, comme accorde avoit este, jay toujours fait tenir mes gens devant la ditte ville de Compiengne.

Points in which Henry has failed.

Mais, mon tres redoubte seigneur, de vostre coste na point este entretenu le dit paiement ; car il en est deu deux mois ou environ, et aussi dartillerie, pour la quelle jay fraye et debourse de mes propres deniers plus de quarante mille saluz, sans mon artillerie, que javoie de garnison, rien ne men a este restitue, jasoit ce que par plusieurs fois que je vous en ay escrit, et envoie devers vous, et fait toutes dilligences possibles ; et pareillement mes gens estans devant le dit Compiengne en mon absence en ont escrit souventes fois devers vous, en vous signifiant au vray lestat des tingdon and his company, ought to remain with me among my people before the said town of Compiègne.

And it is true that, under the impression that this would be done on your part, and especially that the said payment would be made and kept without failing therein, according to agreement therein made, I have always caused my men to be kept before the said town of Compiègne.

But, my very redoubtable lord, the said payment has not been continued on your side; for it is due for two months or thereabouts, and also that of the artillery, for which I have paid and expended more than forty thousand saluz out of my own money, without speaking of my artillery, which I had in garrison, whereof nothing has been repaid to me, notwithstanding the many times that I have written to you about it, and sent to you, and used all diligence possible ; as likewise my men, who are before Compiègne aforesaid, in my absence have oftentimes written to you of it, signifying to you the true state of affairs, as well on the side besoingnes, tant du coste des ennemis comme de leur, et les tres grans deshonneur, domages et inconveniens qui estoient tailliez den venir a vous se ny pourvoyez, et mesmement se ny envoiez hastivement argent pour fournir le dit paiement; veu que journallement, par deffault dicelluy paiement, mes gens se departoient, et leur en convenoit departir et eulx se deschargant, se par faulte du dit paiement inconvenient en avenoit, ainsi quil puet apparoir par la minute de leurs lettres sur ce a vous envoiees,¹ dont sest ensuy que par faulte du dit paiement les gens qui estoient de mon coste ne se sont peu entretenir et les en a convenu departir. Par quoy par faulte de gens len na peu enclore la ville, ainsi quil appartenoit. Et aussi le dit beau cousin de Hontenton ne povoit, comme il disoit, par faulte de paiement, of the enemies as on their own, and the very great dishonour, damages, and inconveniences which were likely to happen to you therefrom if you do not provide for it, and especially if you do not hastily send money to provide for the said payment; seeing that daily, in default of this payment, my men are going away, and they must of necessity depart and discharge themselves, if by default of the said

payment any disadvantage should herein arise, as it may appear by the minute of their letters on this subject sent to you, whence it follows that, in default of the said payment, the men who were on my side have not been able to continue, and they have been forced to depart. Wherefore, for want of men, it has been impossible to surround the town, as ought to have been done. And also the said good cousin of Huntingdon could not, as he said, for want of payment, any longer keep his men together, so the

plus entretenir ses gens, et tellement que linconvenient, dont len se doubtoit, est avenu, ainsi comme je croy que vous et vostre conseil en povez estre acertenez par la relation du dit beau cousin de Hontinton et de ceulx de sa compagnie, lesquelles gens du dit beau cousin de Hontinton, (ja soit ce que apres la chose avenue, aient este fait requis par mes gens deulx entretenir une espace de temps a Pont Levesque, ou tenir les champs illec environ jusques len eust peu envoier devers vous et devers moy, a fin dy pourveoir plus avant,) ne lont voulu faire, ains len sont alez.

Lesquelles choses venues a ma congnoissance mont este et sont si desplaisans que plus ne peuent. Et a fin de obvier a plus grant inconvenient je, (qui mestoye departi de devant la dite ville de Compiengne pour mon fait de Brabant, ainsi quil est bien venu a vostre congnoissance, et men retournoye de tire devant la dite ville, incontinent apres mon dit thing which was apprehended has come to pass, as I believe you and your council can be assured by the relation of the said good cousin of Huntingdon and those of his company. And although the said followers of my said good cousin of Huntingdon after this affair had occurred, had been requested by my men to tarry a space of time at Pont l'Évêque, to continue in the country thereabouts, until it might have been possible to send to you and to me, in order to make speedy provision for it, yet this they did not please to do, but they took themselves off.

When these things came to my knowledge, they have been and are so displeasing to me that nothing could be more so. And in order to obviate worse results, I (who had set out from before the said town of Compiègne for my affairs in Brabant, as you are well aware, and returned thence to go before the said town, immediately after my said affairs in Brabant were completed) have fait de Brabant expedie,) me suis arreste en ceste ma ville, et diligamment ay escript et envoie lettres a vos bonnes villes es marches de pardeca, pour les reconforter et entretenir en vostre obeissance, et aussi que incontinent envoie gens darmes et de trait et establi frontieres es villes et places prouchaines aux ennemis. Et d'autre part, (pour ce que iceulx ennemis tiennent les champs et journellement gaignent places, et se vantent dencores plus faire alencontre de vous et de moy,) je fais mon mandement general a toute puissance au dixiesme jour de ce presente mois entour la ville de Corbie, a fin de resister de ma part alencontre des diz ennemis, et les combattre, alaide de nostre Seigneur, se ils attendent ; esperans que de vostre part y pourvoyez aussi en toute haste, ainsi que la chose qui tant vous touche le requiert bien.

Et toutes voyes, mon tres redoubte seigneur, ces choses je ne puis entretenir ne continuer de ma part sans vostre bonne provision pour le temps a venir, stopped at this my town, and have diligently written and sent letters to your good towns in the marches on this side, to encourage them and keep them in obedience to you, and also have immediately sent men-at-arms and bowmen, and established frontiers in the towns and places near to the enemies. And on the other hand (because these enemies hold the field, and daily gain strongholds, and boast that they will do still more against you and me), I have made my general summons of all my forces on the tenth day of this present month in the neighbourhood of the town of Corbie, in order to resist on my part the said enemies, and to fight them, with the help of our Lord, if they wait ; hoping that on your part you also will make provision for the same in all haste, as this thing, which concerns you so nearly, well requires.

And nevertheless, my very redoubtable lord, these things I cannot support nor continue for my part without your good provision, for the time to come, which should be laquelle convient avoir grande et bien notable, et aussi sans y avoir paiement de ce [que] deu mest par vous, tant des diz deux mois, comme de lartillerie. Pour quoy, mon tres redoubte seigneur, je vous requiere et vous prie tres humblement quil vous plaise delivrer, ou faire delivrer, a mes gens, par lour envoyez a Calais, et qui longuement y ont demore pour ceste cause, les dis paiemens, incontinent, realment et de fait, se deja fait ne lavez ; et largent de quels paiemens, (combien que deu me soit loyalment par vous, et que en pourroie desposer a ma voulente,) neantmoins le vueil je emploier et convertir en la propre besoingne alencontre des diz ennemis.

Avecques ce, mon tres redoubte seigneur, vous requier et prie que pour le temps avenir vueilliez pourveoir au fait de la guerre, tant de vostre coste comme au regard de ce que me puet touchier, par telle maniere et si puissamment que les ennemis puissent estre reboutez hastivement, et que ceulx de ce royaume et very great and notable, and also without having payment for that which is due to me from you, as well for the said two months as for the artillery. Wherefore, my very redoubted lord, I require and pray you very humbly that it may please you to deliver, or cause to be delivered, to my men, by their envoys at Calais, who have long remained there for this cause, the said payments immediately, really and truly, if you have not already done so ; and the money arising from these payments (although it be justly due to me by you, and I might dispose of it at my will) nevertheless I wish to employ it and expend in the special business of opposition to the said enemy.

Moreover, my very redoubtable lord, I require and pray you that for the future you will be pleased to provide for the affairs of the war, as well on your own side as with regard to what may touch me, in such manner and so powerfully as that the enemies may be hastily repulsed, and that those of this kingdom and all others may clearly perceive that your tous autres apparcoivent clerement vostre puissance estre plus grande que celle des diz ennemis, et que ces choses ne soient point mises en delay ne dissimulation, mais soit trouree manier de abregier ceste guerre, et que ce que y aviserez soit chose brieve, ferme, et entretenue sans faillir ; ou autrement il est a doubter de plus grans inconveniens, (que Dieu ne vueille !) et mesmement de la perdicion des bonnes villes de vostre obeissance, et ne devez, ne ceulx de vostre conseil, doubter du contraire. Et au regard de moy, de ma part, je vous en avise et adverti, et vostre conseil, pour ma descharge et acquit.

Et pour ces choses et autres vous remonstrer plus a plain, et a vostre conseil, jay entencion de prouchainement envoier devers vous aucuns de mes gens et conseillers notables. Mais, mon tres redoubte seigneur, je vous prie que sans attendre la venue de mes dis gens, il vous plaise par ce messaige me escrire vostre entencion et bon plaisir sur les choses dessus dittes hastivement et le plus tost que bonne-

power is greater than that of the said enemies, and that there may be no delay nor dissimulation about these things, but that means of shortening this war be found, and that what you determine about it be brief, firm, and carried out without fail ; or otherwise it is to be feared that there will be greater disadvantage (which God forbid !), and even to the loss of the good towns which are obedient to you ; and neither you nor those of your council should doubt to the contrary. And with regard to myself and my part, hereof I assure and advertise you and your council for my discharge and acquittal.

And to show these things and others more plainly to you and your council, I intend to send to you shortly some of my people and notable counsellors. But, my very redoubtable lord, I pray you that, without waiting for the arrival of my said people, it may please you to write your intention and good pleasure on the things above mentioned

Escrut en ma ville Darras, le iv. jour de Novembre.

Vostre humble et obeissant oncle, Philipe duc de Bourgoingne et Brabant et de Lembourg.

A mon tres redoupte seigneur, monseigneur le roy.

by this messenger, hastily and the soonest that possibly may be.

My very redoubtable lord, I pray the blessed Son of God that He will have you in His holy keeping, and grant you a happy and long life.

Written in my town of Arras, the iv. day of November.

Your very humble and obedient uncle, Philippe, duke of Burgundy and Brabant and of Lembourg.

To my very redoubtable lord, my lord the king.

counsellors, chamberlains of my lord of Burgundy, appointed by him to go to the king and to his council being with him.

First, they shall present their letters of credence to the king, to my lord the regent, my lord the cardinal, my lord of Warwik and the rest of his council, to whom they are addressed; and after the presentations of the said letters and the accustomed recommendations for their credit, they shall say what follows:—

That is to say, that, firstly, they shall show to the king and to his council how, at the urgent request of the king, my said lord has employed himself in the business of his war in France, and on his side and on his own part has done and accomplished until this present time all that he had accorded and promised by the indenture made between my said lord the cardinal in the name of the king, on the one part, and of my said lord of Burgundy, on the other;
and how that on this occasion all his country, as well in Burgundy as in the marches of Picardy, has been, and is voye de destruction, et aussi sa conte de Namur pour la plus grant partie destruitte, comme il est notoire.

his adherence to his engagements,

Item, remonstreront apres, comment a la requeste du roy et pour son ordonnance, mon dit seigneur ala devant la ville de Compiengne, ja soit ce que lavis de lui et de ceulx de son conseil ne fust pas tel, ains leur sembloit plus expedient deulx tirer a Crayl et en Laonnois, ainsi que apparoir puet par les avis sur ce bailleuz, envoyez a Calais par messire Jehan Milet, secretaire du roy.

Item, comment par appointment fait depar le roy avecques les gens de mon dit seigneur (cest assavoir, les seigneurs de Santes et du Mesnil, et le Prevost de Saint Omer), le roy devoit paier pour chacun mois a mon dit seigneur de Bourgoingne, pour le paiement de ses gens estans devant la dite ville de Compiengne, la somme [de] dix neuf mille cinq cents francs, monnoye royal, et aussi devoit paier lartillerie. Et avec ce, at war and in the road to destruction, and also his county of Namur is for the most part destroyed, as it is well known.

Item, they shall show afterwards how, at the request of the king and by his command, my said lord went before the town of Compiègne, although such was neither his own opinion nor that of those of his council, but it seemed more expedient to them to advance upon Creil and the Laonnois, as may appear by the advice thereupon given, sent to Calais by messire Jehan Milet, secretary of the king.

Item, how that by the appointment made by the king with the men of my said lord (that is to say, the lords of Santes and Du Mesnil, and the Provost of Saint Omer), the king ought to pay by each month to my said lord of Burgundy, for the payment of his men being before the said town of Compiègne, the sum of nineteen thousand five hundred francs, of royal money, and also should pay the artillery. And moreover, my lord the earl of Huntingdon and monseigneur le conte de Hontinton et sa compaignie devoient demourer delez mon dit seigneur et ses gens devant la dit ville de Compiengne ; et comment mon dit seigneur, confidant ainsi deust estre fait, et mesmement que le dit payement lui deust estre fait et entretenu sans y faillir, comme accorde avoit este, a tous jours fait tenir ses gens devant la ditte ville de Compiengne.

Item, comment le roy de son coste, na point entre-tenu le dit paiement, car il en est deu deux mois ou environ, et aussi de lartillerie ; pour la quelle mon dit seigneur a fraye et despence du sien propre plus de
xl. M. salus, sans son artillerie quil avoit de garnison, rien ne lui a este restitue, ja soit ce que par pluseurs
fois il en ait escript et envoie devers le roy et fait toutes diligences possibles, et pareillement ses gens
estans devant le dit Compiengne en son absence en ont
escrit souventes fois devers le roy, en lui signifiant

his company should remain along with my said lord and his men before the said town of Compiègne ; and how my said lord, trusting that thus it would be done, and especially that the said payment would be made him and continued without failure therein, as had been agreed, has always kept his men before the said town of Compiègne.

Item, how that the king, on his part, has not observed the said payment, for it has been due for two months or there-abouts, and also for the artillery ; for which my said lord has defrayed and spent of his own money more than xl. M. salus, without mentioning his artillery which he had in garrison, whereof nothing has been returned to him, although many times he has written about it and sent to the king, and used all possible diligence, and likewise his men being before the said Compiègne in his absence have written many times about it to the king, signifying to him truly the state of affairs, as well on their own side as on that of mis comme de leur, et les tres grans deshonneur et dommaiges et inconveniens qui estoient taillez denvenir au roy sil ny pourveoit, et mesmement sil ny envoioit hastivement argent pour fournir les diz payemens, veu que journellement par deffault dicelui paiement les gens de mon dit seigneur departoient, et leur enconvenoit departir, en eux deschargant se par faulte du dit paiement inconvenient en avenoit, ainsi quil puet apparoir par la minute de leurs lettres sur ce envoyees au roy.

Item, comment par faulte du dit paiement, les gens qui estoient du coste de monseigneur ne se sont peu entretenir et les a convenu departir, par quoy par faulte de gens len na peu enclore la ville ainsi quil appartenoit; et aussi mon dit seigneur de Hontinton ne povoit (com il disoit) par faulte de paiement plus entretenir ses gens, tellement que linconvenient dont lon se douttoit est advenu; ainsi comme le roy et son conseil en peuent estre acertenez par la relation du

the enemies, and the very great dishonour and ills and evil results which were likely to happen to the king if he did not make provision for them, and especially if he did not send money there hastily to provide for the said payments, seeing that daily by default of this payment the men of my said lord departed, and are compelled to go away, they discharging themselves, if by failure of the said payment misadventure might arise, as may appear by the minute of their letters sent about this matter to the king.

Item, how by default of the said payment, the men who were on the side of my lord have not been able to continue, and have been compelled to go; consequently for want of men they have not been able to enclose the town as should have been done; and also my said lord of Huntingdon could not (as he said), for want of payment, retain his men any longer, so that the ill results of which they were apprehensive had come to pass; as the king and his council may be informed by the relation of my said lord of Huntingdon and dit monseigneur de Hontinton et de ceulx de sa compagnie. Lesquelles gens de la compagnie du dit monseigneur de Hontinton, ja soit ce que apres la chose avenue aient este fort requis par les gens de mon dit seigneur deulx entretenir une espace de temps a Pont Levesque, ou tenir les champs illec environ, jusques len eust peu envoyer devers le roy et mon dit seigneur le duc, a fin dy pourveoir plus avant, ne lont voulu faire, ains len sont alez.

Item, comment mon dit seigneur, lequel sestoit parti de devant la ditte ville de Compiengne pour son fait de Brabant, ainsi quil est bien venu a la congnois- sance du roy, tantost quil a eu expedie le dit fait de Brabant, sen retournoit devant la dite ville, et comment en soy retournant en son chemin a sceu les dites nouvelles, qui tant lui desplaisent que plus ne peuent. Et a fin de obvier a plus grans inconveniens, a incontinent escript lettres aux bonnes villes du roy des marches [pardeca, dont les diz ambassiseurs por-

of those of his company. And those men of the company of my said lord of Huntingdon, although after the thing had happened, had been earnestly required by the men of my said lord to continue for some space of time at Pont l'Evêque, or to keep in the country thereabouts, until they could send to the king and my said lord the duke, so as to make further provision for it, would not do so, but departed.

Item, how my said lord, who had gone from before the said town of Compiègne on his affairs of Brabant, as has come to the knowledge of the king, directly he had finished the said business of Brabant, returned before the said town, and how that in returning then on his road he received the said news, which were so displeasing to him that nothing could be more so. And in order to obviate still greater misfortunes, he immediately wrote letters to the good towns of the king of the marches here, of which the said ambassadors carried the copy to show it, and also has teront la copie,¹ pour la monstrer, et aussi a incontinent envoye gens darmes et de trait, et establi frontieres es villes et places prouchaines aux ennemis. Et d'autre part, pour ce que lon dit que iceulx ennemis tiennent les champs, a l'entencion dassembler gens de son coste, pour y resister de sa part, esperant que le roy y pourvoye en toute haste de son coste en de laissant toute autre chose, ainsi que la chose qui tant lui touche le requiert bien.

Item, remonstreront au roy et a son conseil comment mon dit seigneur a signifie ces choses par lettres closes, quil a escript sur ce au roy et son dit conseil, a fin d'avoir sur se provision hasted; et comment apres le partement des messaiges pour les nouvelles continualles, que de jour en jour et de heure a heure venoient des ennemis, et quils se boutoient fort avant et conqueroient (comme ils font encors tous les jours), places et forte-forthwith sent men-at-arms and archers, and established frontiers in the towns and places near the enemies. And further, because they say that these enemies hold the fields with the intention of assembling men of their side, there to offer resistance on their part, hoping that the king would provide for the same in all haste on his side, leaving every other business, as the matter which touches him so closely well requires of him.

Item, they shall show the king and his council how my said lord has signified these things by closed letters, which he has written about this to the king and his said council, in order to have speedy provision for the same; and how that after the departure of the messengers in consequence of the continual news which from day to day and from hour to hour come from the enemies, and that they were pushing forward rapidly, and would conquer (as they still are doing every day) strongholds and fortresses in the country

Item, remonstreront comment mon dit seigneur ne puet ces choses entretenir ne continuer de sa part, sans la provision du roy pour le temps a venir, laquelle convient avoir grande et bien notable; et aussi sans avoir paiement de ce que deu lui est par le roy, tant des dis deux mois comme de lartillerie.

ment, quil plaise au roy delivrer, ou faire delivrer, a

of the king between the rivers of the Oye and the Somme, and boast they will still do more, my said lord has issued his summons for as early a period as possible, that is to say, on the x. day of this month of November, in the neighbourhood of Corby, so as to resist on his part the said enemies, and to fight with them, if they keep in the country, and to drive them back as well as he can, hoping that the said provision of the king may be briefly made, and besides this he has established frontiers in three or four places near to the said enemies, and sent some of his men, which has been, and is, a thing of great cost for my said lord.

Item, they shall state how that my said lord cannot keep up nor continue these things upon his part, without the provision of the king for the time to come, which ought to be great and very notable; and also without having payment of that which is due to him from the king, as well for the said two months as for the artillery.

Wherefore the said ambassadors shall require, firstly, that it may please the king to deliver or to cause to be delivered, mon dit seigneur les diz paiemens incontinent, reallement, et de fait, se deja nest fait; largent desquels paiemens (combien que deu soit par le roy a mon dit seigneur, et quil en pouvoit disposer a sa voulente) il est content de employer et convertir en la presente besoingne alencontre des dis ennemis. Secondement, que pour le temps a venir le roy pourvoye de fait de sa guerre, tant de son coste comme au regard de ce qui touche mon dit seigneur, par tele maniere et si puissament que les ennemis puissent estre reboutez hastivement, et que ceulx de ce royaume et tous autres appercoivent clerement la puissance du roy estre plus grande que celle des ennemis, et que ces choses ne soient point mises en delay ne dissimulation, mais soit trouree maniere dabregier ceste guerre, et que ce que le roy y avisera soit chose briee, ferme et entretenue, sans faillir. Ou aultrement il est a doubter de plus grans inconveniens (que Dieu ne veuille !) et mesmement de la perdicion des bonnes to my said lord the said payments immediately, really and actually, if it be not done already; the money of which payments (although it be due from the king to my said lord, and that he may employ it at his will), he is content to employ and expend in the present matter against the said enemies. Secondly, that for the time to come the king shall provide for the business of his war, as well upon his side, as also regards what touches my said lord, in such a manner and so powerfully, as that the enemies may be hastily repulsed, and that those of this kingdom and all others may perceive clearly that the power of the king is greater than that of the enemies, and that these things may not be delayed nor done in seeming only, but that a means of shortening this war may be found, and that the thing which the king shall therein advise may be brief, firm, and carried out without fail. If this be not done, it is to be feared there will arise greater misfortunes (which God forbid !) and especially the loss of the good towns vinces de l'obéissance du royaume, et ne doivent le royaume ne son conseil douter du contraire. Et au regard de mon dit seigneur de sa part, il en avise et advertist le royaume et son conseil pour sa descharge et acquit.

Item, au regard de ce qui est due a monseigneur de l'artillerie, se largent nestoient prest, ou que len difficulté de le baillier ou envoier, les dis ambassadeurs pourront secrètement et discrètement ouvrir comment par monseigneur le cardinal a este autres fois offert a mon dit seigneur de lui bailier monseigneur de Bourbon en paiement de ce que le royaume lui doit, et que mon dit seigneur seroit asses content de prendre icellui monseigneur de Bourbon pour le paiement de son dit due, ou la dite artillerie jusques a la somme a lui due pour ceste cause.

Item, remontreroient les dis ambassadeurs comment les pays de mon dit seigneur sont en guerre et en voie de perdition pour la dite guerre du royaume, ainsi que dessus est touchie, et especialment ses pays de Bour-

from the obedience of the king, and neither the king nor his council should imagine the contrary. And as regards my said lord, he, on his part, hereof informs and advertises the king and his council for his discharge and acquittal.

Item, as regards what is due to my lord for the artillery, if money be not on hand, or there be difficulty in paying it or sending it, the said ambassadors might secretly and discreetly open, how it has been formerly offered to my said lord by my lord the cardinal, to surrender to him my lord of Bourbon in payment of what the king owes him, and that my said lord would be well satisfied to take my said lord of Bourbon as payment of his said debt, or for the said artillery, to the sum due to him on this account.

Item, the said ambassadors shall show how the countries of my said lord are in war and on the road to ruin in consequence of the said war of the king, as has been touched upon above, and especially his country of Burgundy, gongne, lesquels de tous costes sont enveronnez des dis ennemis, excepte seulement du coste de Savoye ; et encores nouvellement sest allie le dauphin avec le duc Dosteriche et les Allemans pour faire guerre es dis pais de Bourgongne du coste Dallemaigne incontinent les abstinentes faillies qui sont entre les dis pais de Bourgongne et Dallemaigne, lesquelles fauldront a la Saint Martin¹ prouchainement venant.

Et comment autresfois mon dit seigneur a fait requerir au roy quil voulsist ordonner gens de trait jusques au nombre de deux mille, ou au de mille, paiez de ses despens, pour faire guerre et resister aus dis ennemis es dites marches, et comment de la part du roy la dite requeste de mon dite seigneur fu mise en delay, en donnant esperance dy pourveoir cy apres.

Et comment puis quatre jours est venu un messaige de Bourgoingne devers mon dit seigneur depar son ma-

which are surrounded on all sides by the said enemies, excepting only on the side of Savoy ; and now the dauphin has newly allied himself with the duke of Austria and the Germans to make war on the said country of Burgundy on the side of Germany directly the truce, which is between the said countries of Burgundy and Germany, expires, which will terminate on the feast of Saint Martin next coming.

And how formerly my said lord made a request to the king that he would be pleased to appoint archers to the number of two thousand, or of one thousand, paid at his expense, to make war and resist the said enemies in the said marches, and how on the part of the king the said request of my said lord was delayed, by giving hopes of providing for this afterwards.

And how that four days ago a messenger from Burgundy has come to my said lord from his marshal and his lords

reschal et ses seigneurs et gens de son conseil depar dela, lequel a dit et rapporte pour vray que le daulphin en sa personne et grant puissance des dits ennemis sont a Molins en Bourbonnois¹ et daultre part aultre grant puissance des dis ennemis est arrive es marches de Masconnois et Aucerrois, et requierent les gens de mon dit seigneur depar dela que monseigneur voye en personne, ou aultrement y pourveoie et envoie hastivement des gens, et par especial des archers.

Et pour ce que le besoing y est plus grant que devant, et la provision tres necessaire, requeront les dis ambaisseurs au roy quil lui plaise ordonner et bailler a mon dit seigneur le nombre de archers soubs aucun capitaine notable, payez aus despens du roy, pour (avecques les gens et subgiez de mon dit seigneur des diz pays de Bourgoingne, dont il y a bon nombre et

and the members of his council in that part, who has said and reported as a truth that the dauphin in person, along with a large force of the said enemies, is at Moulins, in Bourbonnois and on the other hand, that another large force of the said enemies has arrived in the marches of the Maconnois and Auxerrois, and the people of my said lord there require that my lord shall go in person, or otherwise provide for the same, and send hastily some troops, and especially some archers.

And because the need there is greater than before, and the provision very necessary, the said ambassadors shall require of the king that it would please him to appoint and give to my said lord the number of archers under some notable captain, paid at the expense of the king, in order that they (along with the men and subjects of my said lord, belonging to the said lands of Burgundy, of souffisant de gens darmes), resister et faire guerre aus diz ennemis, tant es dites marches de Bourgoingne comme aussi es autres marches du royaume illec environ.

Item, remonstreront comment maistre Robert Aulcon, conseiller de monseigneur et son procureur en court de Rome, a este envoie depar nostre saint pere le pape devers monseigneur, et a rapporte, entre autres choses, comment nostre dit pere avoit ordonne et depute deux cardinaulx, assavoir, le cardinal des Ursins et de Saint Pierre ad Vincula, pour venir en France pour le fait de la paix generale, et ne tenoit qua largent que les diz cardinaulx ne venissent, a este ordonne que les diz cardinaulx fussent paiez aux despens des parties, cest assavoir, le dit des Ursins aux despens du roy et le dit de Saint Pierre aux despens du dauphin et de la partie adverse. La quelle chose monseigneur signifie au roy, a fin quil ait avis ; car (comme dient which there is a good number and sufficient of men-at-arms), may resist and make war on the said enemies, as well in the said marches of Burgundy as also in the other marches of the kingdom contiguous thereto.

Item, they shall state how master Robert Aulcon, counsellor of my lord and his procurator to the court of Rome, has been sent from our Holy Father the Pope to my lord, and has reported, among other things, how that our said father had appointed and deputed two cardinals, that is to say, the cardinal des Ursins and the cardinal of Saint Pierre ad Vincula, to come into France for the affairs of the general peace, and nothing but money prevented the said cardinals from coming, it has been arranged that the said cardinals should be paid at the expense of the parties, that is, the said des Ursins at the expense of the king and the said de Saint Pierre at the expense of the dauphin and of the adverse party. Which thing my lord signifies to the king, in order that he may have advice ; for (as some say) our said aucuns) nostre dit saint pere seroit bien d'accord que len meist sur un demy dixiesme pour le paiement du dit cardinal des Ursins ; mais il lui fauldroit faire prest dargent comptant, et le envoier par dela pour le faire venir par deca, en attendant que largent du dit demy dixiesme se levast.

Item, diront et exposeront au roy et a son conseil comment mon dit seigneur a nagueres par lettres closes escript au roy comment a la chose avenue devant la ditte ville de Compiengne, le sire de Crequy, messire Jacques de Brimeu, mareschal de lost, messire Florimond de Brimeu, et messire Waleran de Beauval, chevaliers, qui sont de lostel de mon dit seigneur le duc, lesquels estoient en la bastille de la Leaue, laquelle nestoit point encoresachee, et estoit comme non tenable, ont este par assault, et apres ce quils se furent vaillament et longuement deffendus, prins par les dis ennemis et emmenez prisonniers, et que len a sceu par aucuns prisonniers des dis ennemis, qui sen son venuz, holy father would willingly agree that a half tenth should be levied for the payment of the said cardinal des Ursins ; but he would be obliged to make an advance of ready money, and to send it across to make him come hither, and would have to wait until the money of the said half tenth should be raised.

Item, they shall say and state to the king and to his council how my said lord has formerly written to the king by closed letters, how, in the affair that happened before the said town of Compiègne, that the lord of Crequy, messire Jacques de Brimeu, marshal of the army, messire Florimond de Brimeu and messire Waleran de Beauval, knights, who are of the household of my said lord the duke, who were in the bastille de la Leaue, which was not yet finished, and was (so to speak) untenable, were by assault, and after they had valiantly and for a long time defended themselves, taken by the said enemies and carried off as prisoners, and that it has been made known by certain prisoners of the

que iceulx ennemis ont entencion de les tres durement et grieveement traitez en corps et en biens, et sont taillez de perdre la vie, pour ce que les dis ennemis les connoissant, et quils savent bien quils sont vailans chevaliers, et quils ont tousjours bien servi le roy et mon dit seigneur alencontre des dis ennemis. Et pour tant que le roy a et tient en son povoир aucun prisonniers de la partie des dis ennemis, comme le sire de Rambure, le frere de La Hire, et aultres, par le moyen desquels lon pourroit bien parvenir a la delivrance des dessus diz chevaliers prisonniers, mon dit seigneur a requis par ses dittes lettres closes au roy que, en regard a lestat des dis prisonniers, qui sont bons, vaillans et loyaulx chivaliers, et ont tousjours et continualment bien servi le roy en plusieurs besoignes, tant a lassemblee des ennemis devant Senlis, ou les aucunes deulx furent, et depuis a Paris, quant les ennemis le vindrent assaillir, ou ils se porterent moult vaillamment, et en fu la ville en partie par leur moyen

said enemies, who have come from thence, that these enemies intend to treat them very harshly and severely in body and goods, and they are like to lose their lives, because the said enemies know them, and that they well know that they are valiant knights, and that they have always well served the king and my said lord against the said enemies. And for as much as the king has and holds in his power certain prisoners of the party of the said enemies, such as the lord of Rambure, the brother of La Hire, and others, by the means of whom one could easily procure the deliverance of the above mentioned imprisoned knights, my said lord has required by his said closed letters of the king that, as regards the state of the said prisoners, who are good, valiant and loyal knights, and have always and continually served the king well in many ways, as well in the gathering together of the enemies before Senlis, where some of them were, and since then at Paris, when the enemies came to assail it, where they behaved very valiantly, and the town in part was preserved by their means, as also before the preservee, comme aussi devant la ditte ville de Compiengne, ou ils ont toujours et continualment este sans eulx en bougier. Et considere aussi que ils ont este prins en faisant la guerre du roy et pour son fait, que le roy vueille avoir compassion deulx, et non consentir la delivrance des dis prisonniers ennemis, ne dacun deulx, se nest que par leur moien les diz chevaliers prisonniers puissent estre delivrez, ou par aultre bonne voye et maniere, qui lon pourroit bien pratiquer et trouver avant la deslivrance des diz sire de Rambure et du dit frere de La Hire et autres prisonniers, ennemis dessus diz. Les dis ambaisseurs lui feront encore depar mon dit seigneur semblable priere et requeste.

Item, diront comment aucuns de la ville et chastellenie de Cassel, subgiez de mon dit seigneur, soubz umbre de certaine appellation quils ont en court de parlement a Paris, et aussi de certain mandement royal par eulx obtenu de la ditte court de parlement, soubs couleur de justice et par vertu dicelluy, iceulx said town of Compiègne, where they have always and continually been without stirring from thence. And considering also that they were taken while making war for the king, and on his account, that the king would have compassion on them, and not consent to the deliverance of the said hostile prisoners, nor of any of them, unless it be that by their means the said captive knights may be delivered, or by some other good way or means, which might be easily managed and discovered, before the deliverance of the said lord of Rambure, and of the said brother of La Hire, and other prisoners, being enemies, above mentioned. The said ambassadors shall again make this same prayer and request from my said lord.

Item, shall say how certain persons of the town and district of the castle of Cassel, subjects of my said lord, under cover of a certain appeal which they may have in the court of parliament at Paris, and also of a certain royal writ obtained by them from the said court of parliament, under colour of justice and by virtue hereof, these inhabitants of de Cassel, qui ja pieca se sont rebellez a lencontre de mon dit seigneur et de ses officiers, se sont enfforciez et se tiennent plus fermes et obstinez en leur rebellion et desobeissance, en faisant de grans travaulx et oultrages aux bons subgiez de mon dit seigneur. Et ja soit ce que par le roy eust este ordonne que la dite court de parlement ne se melast plus de la ditte cause, touttevoie rien nen a este tenu ; mais, que plus est, soubs umbre et par vertu du dit mandement, duquel est execteur un huissier de parlement, lequel les diz de Cassel ont fait pardeca¹ et sont et perseverent de pis en pis, en prenant et emmenant les officiers et bons subgiez de mon dit seigneur, et leur faisant beaucoup dautres maulx, oultrages et violences, nest a doubter de peuple (que Dieu ne veuille !) sont taillez dadvenir ou pais de Flandres. Lesquelles choses mon dit seigneur (qui les a souffertes

And although it was ordained by the king that the said court of parliament should no more meddle in the said cause, nevertheless this has not been at all observed ; but, what is more, under shadow and by virtue of the said writ, the executor of which is an officer of the parliament, whom the said men of Cassel have here made and are, and continue to be, going on from worse to worse in taking and carrying away the officers and good subjects of my said lord, and in doing them many other ills, outrages and violences we fear of people (which God forbid !) are certain to happen in the country of Flanders. These things, my said lord (who has suffered them until now to his great

HENRY, by the grace of God, king of France and England, to the first of our serjeants who shall be required about this matter, greeting.

Since, in order to know and correctly ascertain the total number of our men-at-arms and bowmen, as well the ordinary ones as the extra levy, appointed to be in the garrisons of our duchy of Normandy and our conquered country, we have some time ago willed, commanded, and very expressly enjoined our beloved and faithful knight, Thomas Blount, treasurer of our finances of Normandy, with all diligence to command and send from us to the commis-

Car se trouve est que ce soit par la refus des capitanes, lieux tenans, ou gens de guerre, notre intencion nest pas que les reffusans soient paiez sinon du jour quilz auront faites leurs dits monstres. For, if it be found that this is on account of the refusal of the captains, lieutenants or men-at-arms, our intention is that they who refuse shoule be paid only from the day on which they shall have taken their said musters. Wherefore we have not been able to know nor ascertain truly upon what number of men of war we can

And appoint these commissioners a certain day, such as is early and fitting, for them to appear in person before the members of our said great council who are with us, to answer to all that may be said, advanced, or asked of them from us; giving to each of these commissioners an express command from us that, under pain of confiscation of body and goods, they shall appear on the days thus assigned to them by

THE answer made by the English council at Rouen to the articles sent to them by the duke of Burgundy.¹

A.D. 1431.
May 28.
Answer by the council of Henry VI. to the first eight articles.

RESPONSE donnee depar le roy aux articles baillées par escript depar monseigneur le duc de Bourgoingne par messire Philibert Audrenet, chevalier, et Jehan Abonnel, dit le Gros, ses conseilliers, en la maniere qui sensuit.

Et primierement, au regard des huit premiers articles, es quels est faite mention des grans dommages, mises et despenses qui ont soustenues mon dit seigneur de Bourgoingne et ses pais Dartois, Picardie, Namur, Bourgoingne, Charolois, et le pays de Rethelois, a loccation des guerres ; le roy en a tele desplaisance comme de ses propres pais, et a bien chacun congnoissance des grans diligences qui la fait faire ou temps

[TRANSLATION.]

THE reply made on the part of the king to the articles given in writing on the part of monseigneur the duke of Burgundy by messire Philibert Audrenet, knight, and Jehan Abonnel, called le Gros, his counsellors, in the following manner.

And firstly, with regard to the first eight articles, in which is made mention of the great damages, outlays, and expenses which my said lord of Burgundy and his lands of Artois, Picardy, Namur, Burgundy, Charolois, and the country of the Rethelois, have sustained by occasion of the wars ; the king is as much annoyed therewith as if they had been in his own country, and has had ample information of the great diligence which he has caused to be done

passe, tant par monseigneur de Salisbury, (cui Dieux pardoint !) comme par autres capitaines, de esloingner la guerre qui estoit, sept et six ans a, sur les dis pais, en tele maniere que deux ans a, ils estoient en bonne disposition, se neust este la fortune que Dieulx a voulu permettre. En faisant faire laquelle diligence, et pour recouvrer les places qui faisoient nuysance aus dis pais, a expose le roy sa puissance Dangleterre avec grant somme de deniers, de saison en saison, ainsi que encore fera au plaisir de Dieu si avant que bonnement lui sera possible.

Item, quant au neufviesme article, faisant mention ^{To the} de mil combatans, quil a ordonne soubs mon dit ^{ninth.} seigneur de Guise pour les marches de Picardie, et de mil autres combatans, quil envoiera en Bourgoingne par son mareschal, lesquelz il entretendra pour deux mois a ses despens, de la provision aussi quil a mise sur la riviere de Somme, le roy len remercie de tout son cuer. Et pour faire son devoir de son coste, il a

there in time past, as well by my lord of Salisbury (whom may God pardon!) as by other captains, for driving away the war, which has been for the last seven or six years in the said countries, in such manner as that two years ago things were in a good train, had not the issue been as God was pleased to permit it to be. In causing this diligence to be done, and in order to recover the strongholds which were injurious to the said country, the king, at a considerable cost, from time to time, has shown what England can do, as he will still do, if God permit, as effectually as he possibly can.

Item, as for the ninth article, which makes mention of a thousand men-at-arms, whom he has appointed under the said lord of Guise for the marches of Picardy, and of one thousand other men-at-arms, whom he shall send into Burgundy, under his marshal, whom he shall keep for two months at his own charges, and also as to the provision which he has made for the river of Somme, the king thanks him for the same with all his heart. And appointie mon dit seigneur de Guise pour deux mois, (cest assavoir, pour les mois de Juillet et Aoust prouchainement venans,) a la charge de dix huit cent combatans, dont il y aura six cent lances et douze cent hommes de trait, qui seront paiez de ses deniers Dangleterre, pour besoingner es marches de Picardie. Et semble au roy que les diz dix huit cent combatans, qui le roy paie pour les diz deux mois, pourront avec les mil combatans ordonnez, comme dit est, par mon dit seigneur de Bourgoingne, faire plus grant exploit de guerre, et plus seurement et puissament rebouter les diz ennemis, que ne feroient mil combatans seulement. Et quant au pais de Bourgoingne, quant le provost de Saint Omer vint en Angleterre, le conseil avoit ja prins et advise toutes les conclusions pour le royaume de France, tant au regard des finances comme de gens. Et pour contemplacion de mon dit seigneur de Bourgoigne, et lui ader a diffendre son pays de Picardie, ou len disoit lors les ennemis estre a puissance, le dit

in order to do his duty on his part, he has appointed my said lord of Guise for two months (that is to say, for the months of July and August next ensuing) with the charge of eighteen hundred soldiers, of whom six hundred shall be lances, and twelve hundred archers, who shall be paid with his English money, to take care of the marches of Picardy. And it appears to the king that the said eighteen hundred soldiers, whom the king pays for the said two months, shall be able, along with the thousand soldiers appointed, as has been said, by my said lord of Burgundy to make war more effectually, and more surely and powerfully repel the said enemies, than a thousand soldiers only could do. And as for the country of Burgundy, when the provost of Saint Omer came into England, the council had already made and settled all its arrangements for the kingdom of France, as well regarding money as troops. And out of regard to my said lord of Burgundy, and to help him to defend his country of Picardy, where it was then said that the enemies were in strength, the said

conseil condescendi a baillir le dit nombre au dit monseigneur de Guise. Toutes voies, sil advient que, par le plaisir de nostre Seigneur, on ait bonne briefve conclusion du siege que len mit devant Louviers, ainsi que len espere, et aussi du pais den hault, par le moien et bon aide de monseigneur de Bourgoingne, de monseigneur de Staffort, de mon dit seigneur de Guise, de monseigneur de Salisbury, qui vendra prouchainement, et dautres capitaines qui se traïront en hault, ou pourra faire aide de gens pour Bourgoingne et aultres marches par le bon advis et conseil de mon dit seigneur de Bourgong; a la quelle chose faire le roy sera bien enclin si avant que bonnement lui sera possible.

Au dixieme article faisant mention de ce que demand To the tenth.
mon dit seigneur de Bourgongne a cause de ses gens
qui ont este devant Compiengne, et de lartillerie qui y a este employee, le roy fera voir les endentures et appointemens qui ont este faiz et prins en ces matieres

council thought fit to assign the said number to the said lord of Guise. Nevertheless, should it so happen that, by the pleasure of our Lord, there were a good and speedy conclusion to the siege which is before Louviers, as is hoped, and also of the upper country, by the means and good assistance of my lord of Burgundy, of my lord of Stafford, of my said lord of Guise, of my lord of Salisbury, who will speedily come, and of other captains who are coming up, troops may be provided for the assistance of Burgundy and the other border lands by the good advice and counsel of my said lord of Burgundy; to do which thing to the utmost of his ability the king will be exceedingly well inclined.

To the tenth article, which makes mention of what is demanded by my said lord of Burgundy in consequence of his troops who have been before Compiègne, and the artillery which has been there employed, the king will cause to be inspected the indentures and arrangements which have been made and taken in these matters, as well at Bruges

tant a Bruges et a Gand, comme a Calais, l'annee
passee ; et sil plaitoit a mon dit seigneur de Bour-goigne envoier devers lui aucun de ses gens, il y fera tellement appoinctez que par raison en devra estre content.

To the eleventh.

Au onziesme volume, faisant mencion des ambaxadeurs de lempereur, il est vray quilz sont presentement devers le roy, et ont este ois en audience publique, et veulent encore aucunes choses dire en particulier, ce
que le roy oira tres voulentiers ; et ce quilz diront fera savoir a mon dit seigneur de Bourgoingne. Et est lentencion du roy dentendre a la matiere de tres
bon cuer par le bon conseil et avis de mon dit
seigneur de Bourgoigne, sans le quel il ne veult entrer, ne riens faire en la matiere, ainsi que le traitie de la paix final le contient.

twelfth.

Au douziesme article, faisant mencion de monseigneur
le prince Dorenges, le roy a ordonne de faire commu-niquer avec les gens de mon dit seigneur le prince, and at Gand as at Calais, during the past year ; and if it shall be agreeable to my said lord of Burgundy to send to him some of his people, he will cause such an arrangement to be made as ought reasonably to be satisfactory.

To the eleventh article, which makes mention of the ambassadors of the emperor, it is true that they are at this time with the king, and have already had a public audience, and still have some private communications to make, which the king will hear very willingly ; and what they shall say he will cause to be made known to my said lord of Burgundy. And it is the intention of the king to give heed to the matter most willingly, by the good counsel and advice of my said lord of Burgundy, without which he will neither enter upon or do anything in the matter, as is contained in the treaty of final peace.

To the twelfth article, which makes mention of my lord the prince of Orange, the king has arranged that communication be had with the people of my said lord

qui sont a Rouen, et de y faire tel appointement qui bonnement sera possible.

Au treziesme article, faisant mention de monseigneur de Savoye, pour le fait de la delivrance de monseigneur de Bourbon, il a este parle de ceste matiere a monseigneur le cardinal, qui freschement vient Dangleterre. Le quel dit quil na point seeu que conclusion soit prinse par dela ou fait de mon dit seigneur de Bourbon. Bien est vray que on a eu autrefois parle et y prins aucuns appointemens, mais de la partie de mon dit seigneur de Bourben nont este aucunement entretenus, et aussi est la chose demouree. Toutes voies on saura se depuis le partement Dangleterre de mon dit seigneur le cardinal se aucune chose y ait este conclue; et sil est ainsi, le roy le fera savoir a mon dit seigneur de Bourgoingne.

Ce fu fait a Rouen, ou grant conseil du roy, nostre Date. dit seigneur, le xxvij. jour de May, lan M. cccc. xxxj.

the prince, who are at Rouen, and to make there the best arrangement that may possibly be done.

To the thirteenth article, which makes mention of my lord of Savoy, for the matter of the deliverance of my lord of Bourbon, there has been some conversation upon this affair with my lord the cardinal, who has lately returned from England. He says that he did not know that any conclusion had been arrived at there upon the business of my said lord of Bourbon. It is quite true that this has been talked about previously, and that some arrangements have been therein made, but they were not at all entertained on the side of my lord of Bourbon, and so the matter has stood over. Nevertheless, it shall be ascertained whether, since the departure from England of my said lord the cardinal, any conclusion has been arrived at therein; and if it be so, the king will cause my said lord of Burgundy to be acquainted therewith.

This was executed at Rouen, in the great council of the king, our said lord, the xxvij. day of May, in the year M. cccc. xxxj.

LETTER from the duke of Burgundy to Henry the Sixth respecting a truce with France.¹

A.D. 1431. MON tres redoupte seigneur, tant et si tres humblement que plus puis, je me recommande a vous.

^{12 Dec.} Mon tres redoupte seigneur, je tieng bien estre en vostre noble memoire comment par plusieurs fois jay fait remonstrer a vous et a vostre conseil de France et Dangleterre lestat ou mesme pays de Bourgoingne estoient et sont a l'occasion de la guerre, et comment ils estoient de toutes pars environnez de vos ennemis et des mien ; et aussi la grant guerre que les dis ennemis faisoient journelement en nos pays Dartois, et autres pardeca es marches de Picardie, et pareillement de pays de Rethelois, es marches de Champagne ; et comme, pour y pourveoir le plus avant que possible,

[TRANSLATION.]

My most dread lord, I recommend myself to you as much and as most humbly as I am best able.

My most redoubted lord, I am well convinced that it is in your noble memory how that I have several times caused to be shown to you and your council of France and of England the condition in which the said countries of Burgundy were, and are, in consequence of the war, and how they were on all sides surrounded by your enemies and mine ; and also the great war which the said enemies made daily in our countries of Artois and others on this side, in the marches of Picardy, and likewise in the country of the Rethelois, in the marches of Champagne ; and how, in order that I might make the speediest provision there that me seroit avoie entention de mettre sus es dittes marches et pays le plus grant nombre de gens darmes et de trait que pourroye, a lencontre des dis ennemis, lespace de deux mois ; ce que jay fait et accompli. Car tant es marches de mes diz pays de Bourgongne soubz mon mareschal, comme es marches de mes diz pays de Picardie, soubs beau cousin de Luxembourg, et aussi ou pays de Rethelois soubs le sire de Cernant, mon conseillier et chambellan, ay fait mettre ses grandes et notables armes qui grandement se sont emploiees a lencontre des diz ennemis, et telles armes ay entretenues a mes frais et despens le dit espace de deux mois et plus.

Et pour ce, mon tres redoublé seigneur, vous ay fait requerer tres instament que, pour entretenir les dittes armes et resister a iceulx ennemis, il vous plaise me faire aide et secours de gens, dargent, ou au moins dargent, tellement que par faulte de votre dit aide et secours, il ne convenist les dittes armes desem-

is possible, it was my intention to raise in the said marches and countries the greatest possible number of men-at-arms and archers in opposition to the said enemies, for the space of two months ; which I have done and accomplished. For as well in the marches of my said countries of Burgundy, under my marshal, as in the marches of my said countries of Picardy, under my good cousin of Luxembourg, and also in the country of the Rethelois, under the sire de Cernant, my councillor and chamberlain, I have caused to be sent those great and notable armies which have employed themselves to good purpose against the said enemies, and have supported these armies at my charges and expenses for the said space of two months and more.

And for this cause, my most dread lord, I have required you very earnestly that, in order to support the said armies and to resist these enemies, it would please you to assist and succour me with troops and money, or at the least with money, in such wise that from want of your said aid and succour, it was not necessary to disband the said armies parer, et prendre et accepter autre provision pour la seurte de mes dis pays ; ce que faire me convenoit au deffault de vostre dit secours. Et ces choses vous ay je fait exposer et a vostre dit conseil par diverses ambassades, lettres, et messaiges. Cest assavoir, premierement, par le sire de Chauney, mon chambellan, et messire Jehan de Pressy, mes conseillers ; et depuis par messire Philibert Audrenet, aussi mon conseiller et chambellan, et Jehan Gros, mon receveur general de mes finances, que pour ceste cause ay envoye devers vous a vostre cite de Rouen ; et aussi par le prevost de S. Omer, mon conseillier, et maistre Christian Hautain, mon secretaire, qui semblablement ay envoie pour ceste cause par devers vostre conseil en vostre royaume Dangleterre. Et avecques ce, lay dit de bouche assez au long a beau cousin reverend pere en Dieu levesque de Therouenne, vostre chancelier de France.

Lequel secours et aide, non obstant toutes lettres, expositions, requestes et supplications, nay pou avoir and to take and accept another arrangement for the safety of my said countries ; which I would have to do for want of your said succour. And these things have I caused to be shown to you and your said council by different embassies, letters, and messengers. That is to say, in the first place, by the sire de Chauny, my chamberlain, and messire Jehan de Pressy, my councillors ; and then by messire Philibert Audrenet, likewise my councillor and chamberlain, and Jehan Gros, my receiver-general of my finances, whom for this cause I have sent to you to your city of Rouen ; and also by the provost of S. Omer, my councillor, and master Christian Hautain, my secretary, whom in like manner I have sent for this cause to your council, in your realm of England. And moreover, I have stated it verbally, at considerable length, to my good cousin the reverend father in God the bishop of Therouanne, your chancellor of France.

Which succour and aid, notwithstanding all letters, statements, requests, and supplications, I have been unable to ob-de vous, non mie encore le payement de ce que me devez clerement par compte fait avecques vos gens, montant a grant somme, que jeusse volontiers emploie en lentretenement des dittes armees, se leusse peu recouvrer de vous ; par quoy a convenu de sampaier les dittes armees. Et finablement a ceste cause, par deffault du dit vostre secours, et afin de la¹ destruction de mes diz pays et subgiez, ay estre constraint de consentir estre mises sus certaines treves et abstainances de guerre de mes diz pays, et mesmement de mes pays de Bourgoingne, avecques vos diz ennemis et les miens. And finally, from this cause, by default of your said succour, and in order to [avoid] the destruction of my said countries and subjects, I have been constrained to consent that certain truces and abstainances of war should be made in my said countries, and especially in my countries of Burgundy, with your said enemies and mine. The which truces and abstainances have been by my people taken and agreed to by a certain form and manner, which has assuredly come to your knowledge and that of your council, as I believe. Lesquelles choses, mon tres redoubte seigneur, je vous signiffie afin que sachiez la verite de ce que de ma part y a este fait jusques a present ; et tout ce que plus avant ou aultrement y sera fait et besoigne cy apres vous signiffeiray et feray savoir diligemment;

said adversary and mine ; that is to say, the archbishop of Rheims, who calls himself his chancellor, Christofle de Harcourt, and master Adam de Cambray ; who are in the city of Tournay, and shortly will come into this town to me.

And it is indeed true that of late there have come to me the deputies of the people of the Three Estates of my country of Artois, with the deputies of your good towns on this side, contiguous to my said country, as Amiens, Abbeville, Noyon, S. Quintin, Chauny and others ; who have requested of me most urgently that I would be pleased to cause them to be included in the said abstinentes ; complaining bitterly, and affirming that otherwise they will be ruined.

Which things, my most dread lord, I signify to you, to the end that you may know the truth of that which upon my part has been done up to this present time ; and all that shall be done or proceeded with further, or otherwise, therein after this time, I will signify to you, and will diligently take care that you are made aware of it ; praying you, my very dread lord, that with what I have done, and shall do herein, you would be pleased to be satisfied, and that on this account you would be pleased not to conceive any suspicion or evil surmise against me. For neither in the said matter of these abstinences, nor otherwise, have I done, nor shall I do, anything which I ought not, or may not do with honour ; and what I have herein done, and shall do further, it was necessary for me to do touching the said abstinences, and has been and shall be because I could no longer support at my cost and expenses the charge of the war, and because I could not have of you the aid and succour which is rightfully due by you to me, and which I have so often asked of you, and that most urgently.

Mon tres redoubte seigneur, tousjours vous plaise moy mander vos bons plaisirs pour les a mon povoir accomplir tres volontiers et de tres bon cuer, a laide de nostre Seigneur, qui, mon tres redoubte seigneur,

My very dread lord, may it always please you to send me your good pleasure, that I may accomplish it most willingly and with a right good will, by the aid of our Lord, Who, my most dread lord, I pray to keep you in cuyer, tresorier et general gouverneur de noz finances, ou pays et duchie de Normandie, et a nostre bien ame Pierre Surreau, receveur general des nos dits finances, salut et dilection.

Comme, environ le vij. jour Doctobre derrenier passe, nous, par ladvis et deliberacion des gens de nostre grant conseil etans lors par devers nous, nous eussions convoque et fait assembler en nostre ville de Rouen les gens des Trois Estatz de nos dits duchie de Normandie et pays de conqueste, et leur fait dire et exposer le grant desir et affection que avons de conserver, a laide de nostre Createur, noz villes, places, et forteresses diceulx duchie et pays, recouvrer par sieges ou autrement celles que y occupoient et detenoient noz ennemis et adversaires, et les rebouter a toute puissance. Pourquoy faire, avions advise continuer es dits places et fortresses le nombre de gens darmes et de trait que ordinairement y avoit este lannee precedent, finie a la Saint Michiel derrenier passe, montant ix. c. lances et treasurer and governor-general of our finances in the country and duchy of Normandy, and to our wellbeloved Pierre Surreau, receiver-general of our said finances, greeting and love.

As, about the vij. day of October last past, we, by the advice and deliberation of the members of our great council being then with us, we had convoked and caused to assemble in our said city of Rouen the members of the Three Estates of our said duchy of Normandy and the conquered country, and caused to be told and shown to them the great desire and affection that we have to keep, by the aid of our Creator, our towns, strongholds, and fortresses of the said duchy and country, to recover by sieges or otherwise those which our enemies and adversaries occupy and retain there, and to repulse them effectually. To do which we have determined to continue in the said places and fortresses the number of men-at-arms and archers which there were generally there during the last year, which ended on St. Michael's day last, amounting to ix. hundred lances and ij. m. vij.e.

ij. M. vij. c. archiers, ou environ, tant a cheval comme a pie, avec autre grant nombre, pour tenir les champs et pour le recouvrement des places et forteresses de Bosmoulins, Aimont, Hoe, Chaillonel, Saint Celerin, Mauson, et Montaudain, occupee par les dits ennemis, afin que nos bons, vrayz et loyaux sujetz, manans et demourants en iceulx duchie et pays, puissent vivre en paix et transquillite, en bonne justice et police, et faire paisiblement leurs labours, ouvrages, et marchandises. Le paiement desquelles lances et archiers et autres gens de guerre, ne porons pour ceste presente annee, commençant a la Saint Michiel derrenier passe, supporter ne fournir, attendu la paurete de noz finances. Et pour ce eussions fait requerir a ceulx des dits estatz, que pour le paiement des dits gens ils nous baillissent octroys pour la dite armee la somme de ij. c. m. livres Tournois, considere que en ce faisons convertir tous les deniers de nos aides et greniers, excepte le paie-archers, or thereabouts, as well on horseback as on foot, with another great number for keeping the country and for recovering the places and fortresses of Bosmoulins, Aimont, Hoe, Chaillonel, Saint Celerin, Manson, and Montaudain, occupied by the said enemies, to the end that our good, true, and loyal subjects, residing and living in the said duchy and country, may be able to live in peace and tranquillity, in good justice and government, and peaceably to carry on their labours, work, and merchandise. The payment of which lances and archers and other soldiers we cannot for this present year, beginning on St. Michael's day last past, either support nor furnish, on account of the poverty of our finances. And on this account we have caused a request to be made to the members of the said Three Estates, that for the payment of the said men they should give us, as an assessment for the said army, the sum of ij. c. m. pounds Tournois, upon the understanding that in this we should cause to be expended all the money of our aids and stores, excepting the payment of xlviij. pounds

ment de xlviij. livres Tournois par an, ordonnes pour nostre tres chier et tres ame oncle Jehan, gouvernant et regent nostre dit royaülme de France, duc de Bedfort, a icelle somme cueillir et lever a trois ou quatre termes durant lannee.

Les quelz, comme bons, vraiz, et loyaux subgetz, oye nostre dit requeste, et apres ce quilz eurent eu sur ce deliberacion et avis entre eux, considerant les grans charges tant de la guerre comme autres, qui nous survenoient et pourroient survenir de jour en jour, nous eussent liberalement octroye, et accorde prendre et lever sur eux, a trois ou quatre termes en icelle annee, ce qui nous seroit necessaire pour le payement dicelles gens des garnisons ordinaires de nos dit duchie et pays, jusques a la somme de ij. c. m. livres Tournois, ou autre somme au dessoubz telle, comme besoing seroit pour le paiement dicelles garnisons ordinnaires, pour convertir et emploier ou dit paiement, et non ailleurs, ce qui en seroit cueilli et leve sur eux; en paiant bonne-

Tournois, yearly, assigned to our very dear and well beloved uncle, John, governor and regent of our said kingdom of France, duke of Bedfort; this sum to be collected and raised at three or four terms during the year.

And they, like good, true, and loyal subjects, having heard our said request, and after having had deliberation and counsel upon the same among themselves, considering the great charges, as well for the war as for other things, which press upon us, and may daily press upon us, have liberally granted to us and given us authority to take and levy from them, at three or four terms during this year, what will be necessary for us for the payment of the said troops of the ordinary garrisons of our said duchy and land, to the sum of ij. c. m. pounds Tournois, or such other lower sum as shall be necessary for the payment of the said ordinary garrisons, to convert and employ in the said payment, and for no other purpose, what shall be raised and levied on them; justly paying in each vicomté, with the money which may be mént en chacune viconte de largent qui en soit cueilli a cause du dit octroy, les garnisons des villes ou forteresses étant en icelles. Et avec ce, nous eussent requis que le nombre de iij. c. lances, et ix. c. archiers fust mis sus pour recouvrement des dits places de Bosmoulins, Aimon, Hoe, Chaillonel, Saint Celerin, Mausson, et Montaudain, occupee par noz dits ennemis, lesquelles places sont situees et assises es mettes et prochaines de nostre dite païs; et que les derniers quil conviendroit pour le payement diceulx fussent cueillis et levez sur eux en une ou plusiers fois avec loctroy dessus dit, oultre et par dessus icellui, pour troys moys, ou autre plus long tems, se pour le cas dessus dit besoing en etoit. Oye laquelle requeste, icelle eusmes agreable.

Pour quoy, et aussi pour consideracion des grans volentes et bonnes loyaultez de nos dits subgiez, avons pieca ordonne et mis sus icellui nombre de iij. c. lances et ix. c. archiers, et avec ce cent lances et les archiers gathered on account of the said tax, the garrisons of the towns or fortresses being in the same. And moreover, they have required of us that the number of iij. c. lances and ix. c. archers should be raised for the recovery of the said places of Bosmoulins, Aimon, Hoe, Chaillonel, St. Clerin, Mausson and Montaudain, occupied by our said enemies ; which places are situated and located on the border of and near to our said country ; and that the money which shall be required for their payment thereof should be gathered and levied on them, once or more frequently, along with the tax above-mentioned, over and above the same, for three months, or some other longer period, if need be, for the cause above-mentioned. Having heard this request, we assented thereto.

For this cause, and also out of regard to the good wishes and good loyalty of our said subjects, we have some time since ordered and raised the said number of iij. c. lances and ix. c. archers, and besides these a hundred lances and ou nombre des garnisons ordinaires de noz dits duchie et pays dessus dits pour tenir les champs et recouvrer par sieges et autrement les places dessus declarees ; lesquelles gens y avoient servy par cinq mois, et encores servent de present. Pour le paiement des quelx et aussi de ceulx des dits garnisons ordinaires, pour les tiers quartz de ceste dite presente annee, soit besoing et necessite de asseoir et imposer sur noz dits subgiez partie diceulx octroys, ou autrement le dit paiement ne pourroit estre fait, ne les dits gens entretenuz ; qui seroit au retardement du fait de nostre guerre et de la recouvrance des dits places.

Nous, qui desirons et voulons a ce pourveoir, par ladvis et deliberation de nostre dit oncle, vous mandons et expressement enjoignons, en commettant par ces presentes, que a toute diligence vous imposez et assees sur les bourgeois, manans et habitans de noz dits duchie de Normandie et pays de conquête, la somme de cinquante mille livres Tournois pour le tiers archers to the number of the ordinary garrisons of our said duchy and country above-mentioned, to keep the country and recover by sieges and otherwise the strongholds above declared ; which troops have served there for five months, and still at present are serving. For whose payment, and also for those of the said ordinary garrisons, during the third quarter of this said present year, it is needful and necessary to assess and impose on our said subjects a part of these taxes, or otherwise the said payment could not be made, nor the said men continued ; which would retard the progress of our said war and the recovering of the places aforesaid.

We, who wish and desire to provide against this, by the advice and deliberation of our said uncle, command and expressly enjoin you, commissioning you by these present letters, that with all diligence you levy and impose upon the burgesses, residents, and inhabitants of our said duchy of Normandy and the conquered country, the sum of fifty thousand pounds Tournois, for the third payment of the paientement de ij. c. m. livres Tournois, par bailliages, vicomtez, eslections et villes, le plus egalement que faire pourres, non comprintz en ce les gens deglise, nobles vivans noblement, frequentans les armes, ou qui par vieillesse et impotence de corps en sont excuses, et semblables personnes, qui selon la coustume du pays en sont exemptes. Et cultre avec la dite somme asseez aussi et imposes la somme de trente mil livres Tournois sur iceulx bourgeois, manans et habitants pour continuer ce paientement jusques au premier jour de Juillet prouchain venant. Iceulx iij. c. hommes darmes et ix. c. archiers estans soubz le dit sire de Willingtby Festass¹ pour le mois de May derrennier passe, et ce present moys de Juing, et se il ne besongne ce dit present mois de Juing, sera tourne ou tems subsequant, et pour convertir en la demolicion de certaines places ordonnees estre abatues en noz dits duchie et pays de conqueste,

ij. c. m. pounds Tournois, by bailliwicks, vicomtés, divisions and towns, as equally as it can be done; without comprehending in this churchmen, nobles living like nobles, frequenting arms, or persons who by age or infirmity of body are exempt from this, and the like persons, who according to the custom of the country, are exempt therefrom. And moreover, with the said sum, you shall also levy and impose the sum of thirty thousand pounds Tournois, on the said burgesses, residents, and inhabitants, to continue this payment until the first day of July next coming. These iij. c. men-at-arms and ix. c. archers being under the said lord Willingtby Festass for the month of May last past, and this present month of June, and if this present month of June be not needed, it shall be carried on to some subsequent time, and shall be employed in the demolition of certain piaces appointed to be pulled down in our said duchy and the conquered country, and for the payment of et au paiement de certaine creue de gens darmes et de trait ordonnes a Mantes, Verneuil, Dreux et autres places faisans frontiere en Normandie, contre le Chartrain, Beauvais et Rembures ; et avec icelles sommes asseeez sur les dits bourgois, manans et habitans des bailliages de Caen et Constantin, la somme de trois mil livres Tournois pour faire le paiement de certaines choses advisees pour le fait du Mont Saint Michiel. Et au cas que le dit avis ne sera mis a effect, la dite somme sera tournee en lentretenement de larmee du dit sire de Willingtby, ou de la creue que demande le dit sire de Willingtby pour les deux derrenieres places de sa charge, qui encores sont a recouvrer. Et cinq cens livres Tournois pour parfaire lemparement et fortification de la ville Davranches ; et six cens quarante cinq livres Tournois sur les habitans de la viconte de Coustances, pour convertir au payement de une lance et quarante archiers a cheval, quilz mettent sus pour rebouter les brigantz pour troys moys.

certain additional men-at-arms and bowmen appointed at Mantes, Verneuil, Dreux, and other places which constitute the frontiers in Normandy opposite the Chartrain, Beauvais and Rambures ; and with these sums levied on the said burgesses, residents and inhabitants of the bailliwicks of Caen and the Cotentin, the sum of three thousand pounds Tournois, to make the payment of certain things decided on for the affair of Mont Saint Michiel. And in case the said plan shall not be carried into effect, the said sum shall be employed upon the keeping up of the army of the said lord of Willingtby, or of the extra troops which the said lord of Willingtby demands for the two last places under his charge, which are still to be recovered. And five hundred pounds Tournois to accomplish the taking and fortification of the town of Avranches ; and six hundred and forty-five pounds Tournois on the inhabitants of the vicomté of Coutances, to employ it in the payment of one lance and forty archers on horseback, whom they have raised to repulse the brigands for three months.

Et les dits assiettes faites, les renvoyes par devers les esleuz de la vicomte, et autres officiers des lieux quil appartiendra, pour les imposer par paroisses, si comme il est accoustume. Et icelles sommes faietes cueillir et lever par ceulx qui a la requeste des dits Estats ont receu et cueilli laide de lannee passee, ou les premier et second paiement du dit octroy, tellement et si diligemment que dedens le viij^eour de Juillet prouchainement venant elles sont cueillies, levees et apportees par devers vous, Pierre Surreau, receveur general de Normandie, ausquelles sommes recevoir nous vous avons commis, et commettons par ces presentes, pour les convertir et employer aux choses dessus dites, et non ailleurs. Pourveu quil y ait au devant de quelconque contrainte, trois jours de marchie depuis la publication de lassiette en chascun des bailliages ou vicitez dessus dits. Et contraingnez, ou faietes contraindre, a ce tous ceux qui pour ce seront a contraindre par toutes

And when the said assessments have been made, you shall send them to the assessors of the said vicomté, and the other officers of the places as required to levy them by parishes, as is customary. And these sums you shall cause to be collected and raised by those persons who at the request of the said Estates have received and collected the aid for the last year, or the first and second payment of the said tax, in such manner and so diligently, that before the viij. day of July next coming they may be collected, levied, and brought to you, Pierre Surreau, receiver-general of Normandy, which sums we have commissioned you, and do commission you by these present letters, to receive, to spend them and employ them in the things above-mentioned, and not otherways. Provided that before any distress whatsoever, there be three market days after the publication of the tax in each of the said bailliwickes or vicomtés above-mentioned. And you shall distrain, or shall cause to be distrained, all those persons whom it shall be necessary to distrain by all

voyes deues et raisonnables, ainsi que accoustume est de faire pour nos propres debtes.

De toutes lesquelles choses faire, avec leurs circonstances et dependances, vous avons donne et donnons par ces presentes pouvoir, auctorite et mandement especial. En accomplissant vostre commandement et ordonnanee, avons este devers le roy en son royaulme Dangleterre. Et pour ce que devons rescripre en unes lettres tout ce que avons besoingnie, vu et oy pardela, ne se pourroit pas bien faire, (car la chose seroit trop longue,) nous le vous escripvons avec cestes en trois parties ce qui y avons besoingnie et trouve. Dont la premiere lettre contient ce que avons expose au roy au regard de nostre charge principál, et des responses que sur ce avons eues.

La seconde contient comment nous avons parle a monseigneur Dorleans ; ce que il nous a dit, ce que avons peu sentir de lui et de son fait.

La tierche contient plusieurs choses de divers propos que avons oyes et entendues pardela, dont il nous semble estre bon que soyez adverti.

Si vous supplions, nostre tres redoubte seigneur, quil vous plaise recevoir en gre ce que avons peu ou sceu faire, car a nos povoirs la vous fait loyalment. Et au

In accomplishing your command and appointment, we have been to the king in his kingdom of England. And as we ought to write all that we have seen and heard there, it could not well be done in one letter (for the matter would be too long), we will write to you here-with in three parts, what we have done there and found. Of this, the first letter contains what we have stated to the king with regard to our principal charge, and the answers which we have had thereto.

The second contains how we have spoken to my lord of Orleans ; what he has said to us, what we have been able to discover about him and his affairs.

The third contains many things of divers matters which we have heard and understood there, of which it seems good to us that you should be apprised.

Wherfore we entreat you, our very redoubtable lord, that you would be pleased to take in good part what we have been able to do or ascertain, for we have done it as faithfully for you as we were able. And as regards regard de moy, Hue de Lannoy, garde les termes, a vostre correction, de ce que me deistes ou prayel de vostre hostel en vestre ville Darras le plus pres que jay peu ; mais en proposant a vous. En regard a la disposition en quoy avons trouve generalment tous ceulx du royaume, qui en verite a nostre venue estoient generalment comme tous, malcontens, et avons este de prime face asses crument receuz. Mais apres ce que avons este oye, il nous est avis que les choses se sont tres bien adouchies ; et a vous veritablement escrire, navons point trouve quils aient entention de faire quelques traitties ne entreprisnes au prejudice de vous, ou de vos pays ; mais tenons pour verite quils desirent entretenir amour et bienveuillance a vous et vos diz pays ; ainsi que tout ce vous pourra plus a plain apparoir par les lettres du roy et la response, dont dessus est faite mention. Nostre tres redoube seigneur, nous prions au Benoit Filz de Dieu, quil vous donist bonne vie et longue.

me, Hue de Lannoy, I have kept the terms, under your correction, as to what you told me in the lawn of your residence in your town of Arras, as near as I could, but yet submitting it to you. As regards the disposition in which we have for the most part found all those of the kingdom, truly at our arrival they were generally almost all of them ill-affected, and we were received at the first unkindly enough. But, after what we have heard, we have come to the conclusion that things have become considerably softened down ; and to write to you truly, we have not by any means found that they intend to make any treaties or enterprises to the prejudice of you or your country : but we hold it as a truth that they desire to continue in love and good-will towards you and your said country ; all which may more plainly appear by the king's letter and the answer, of which mention is made above. Our very dread lord, we pray the Blessed Son of God, that He give you a good and long life.

Nostre tres redoupte seigneur ; nous vous prions que les lettres que nous vous escripvons avec ces presentes, apres ce que les aures veues, soient arses, rompues, ou gardees par tel de vos gens que nul inconvenient nen puissent venir ; car vous veez bien quelles touchent a plusieurs personnes.

Mon tres redoute seigneur ; jai oublie de mettre en mes lettres comment nous avons bien oi en Engleterre parler ke le mariage du roi et de la fille du Daufin a este mis avant par aukuns ; mes nous navans point peu sentir ke rien en soit fet, et osi ce seroit, comme on nous a dit, en faisant pais generalle.

Written in your town of Lille, the xvij. day of July.
Your humble and obedient servants,
HUE DE LANNOY, LORD OF SANTES, and the TREASURER OF THE BOULENOIS.

Our very redoubtable lord ; we pray you that the letters which we write you with these presents, after you have seen them, may be burnt, torn, or kept by such persons of yours as that no mischief may arise therefrom ; for you well see that they relate to several persons.

My very redoubtable lord ; I have forgotten to put in my letters how we have heard it said in England that the marriage of the king and of the daughter of the Dauphin has been hurried on by certain persons ; but we have not been able to ascertain that anything will be done therein, and also that this would be, as we have been told, by making a general peace.

HUE DE LANNOY.

ACCOUNT OF THEIR ARRIVAL IN ENGLAND.

Account of their arrival in England.

Nostre tres redoubte seigneur, nous nous recommandons a vous si tres humblement qui plus povons. Et vous plaise savoir que nous, arrive en Angleterre, entre Sandewids et Cantorbie, encontrasmes plusieurs prelas et princes, qui sen alloient au devant de monseigneur le regent et madame la regente, en laquelle compagnie estoit monseigneur le comte de Suffort, auquel aviesmez lettres adrechans depar vous, lesquelles lui presantasmes, et avec ce lui priasmes que il se voulsist emploier ad ce que peussions avoir audience devers le roy, et quil nous vaulsist aidier en nostre expedition, en lui recommandant vous et vos affaires. Et lui dismes depar vous tout ce quil nous sembloit qui povoit prouffiter selon nostre charge. Lesquelles

To our very redoubtable lord and prince, my lord the duke of Burgundy and Brabant, &c.

Our very redoubtable lord, we recommend ourselves to you as humbly as we best may. And may it please you to know that on our arrival in England, between Sandwich and Canterbury, we met several prelates and princes who were going to meet my lord the regent and madame his wife, in which company was my lord the earl of Suffolk, to whom we had letters addressed from you, which we presented to him, and at the same time prayed him that he would be pleased to employ himself so that we might have an audience with the king, and that he would be so good as to aid us in bringing our mission to an end, recommending to him you and your affairs. And we said from you to him all that seemed likely to be profitable to us, in advancing our business. These said letters of yours vos dites lettres rechut tres liement, et demanda tres fort de vous, et nous dist quil est tout a vostre commandement, et quil se sentoit plus tenus a vous qua prince du monde, et pour qui il vouldroit le plus faire apres le roy, son seigneur.

Et dillec tout droit nous tirasmes a Londres ; et incontinent nous arrive en allasmes devers le conte de Warewic, qui estoit en son hostel, et lui presentasmes vos lettres, et lui dismes depar vous en substance ainsi que aviesmez fait au dit conte de Suffort. Le quel conte de Warewic nous rechut gracieusement, un peu plus sombrement que aultre fois navoit fait. Touttes voyes il nous demanda de vostre estat ; et a la parfin nous lui demandasmez ou nous pourriesmez trouver le roy, car nous avions lettres depar vous adrechans a lui. A quoy nous respondy que prestement ne nous en savoit respondre, car le roy estoit alle en chaches et deduis ; mais le lendemain nous feroit savoir le jour et lieu ou nous le pourriens trouver.

he received very joyfully, and asked after you very anxiously, and he said to us that he is quite at your command, and that he felt himself more beholden to you than to any prince in the world, and for whom he would do the most after the king, his lord.

And from thence we went straight to London ; and immediately on our arrival we went to the earl of Warwick, who was in his house, and we presented to him your letters, and said to him from you in substance the same that we had said to the said earl of Suffolk. The said earl of Warwick received us graciously, a little more gravely than he had done before. Still, however, he asked how you were ; and at the last we asked him where we should be able to find the king, for we had letters from you addressed to him. To which he replied that at that present time he could not answer about that, for the king had gone on a hunting and pleasure excursion ; but that on the morrow he would let us know the day and the place when we should be able to find him.

the cardinal, the king,

Et le lendemain bien matin en alasmes a la messe de monseigneur le cardinal, lui presentasmez vos lettres, et deismez tout ce quil nous sembloit qui povoit proufiter au bien et expedition de nostre charge. Lequel mon dit seigneur le cardinal nous rechut bien gracieusement, et demanda beaucoup de vous, en soy presentant de semployer a tout ce qui senteroit qui vous pourroit venir a plaisir, et a nostre delivrance. Mais a la verite nous le trouvasmes aucunement plus estrange que par cy devant navons accoustume de faire. Et en ceste mesme journee nous fist savoir mon dit seigneur de Warewic que nous trouveriemez le roy en une ville xxv. miles pardela Londres, apelle Gildevorde, et que fussiens le Vendredy ensuivant bien matin devers lui a lessue de la messe, ce que nous fusmes ; et illec trouvasmes le roy, et en sa compagnie les ducs de Bedford, de Gloucestre, et Dyork, et le joisne duc de Noortfolk, le conte de Warewic, le conte de Salseberi, de Notonberlant, et de Souffort, et plusieurs autres grans

And very early on the next morning, as we were going to the mass of my lord the cardinal, we presented to him your letters, and said to him all that we thought would be profitable for the good and expedition of our charge. The said lord cardinal received us very graciously, and asked a great deal about you, promising to employ himself in all that he thought likely to forward your pleasure and our discharge. But, truly, we did find him somewhat stranger than before this we have been accustomed to do. And this same day my said lord of Warwick told us that we should find the king in a town xxv. miles on the other side of London called Guilford, and that we should be with him the next Friday very early in the morning, as he came from his mass ; and this we did, and there we found the king, and in his company were the dukes of Bedford, of Gloucester, and of York, and the young duke of Norfolk, the earl of Warwick, the earls of Salisbury, of Northumberland, and of Suffolk, and many other great seigneurs. Et illec presentasmes au roy vos lettres, et feismes les recommendations le mieulx que nous sceusmez ne peusmez. Le quel roy (qui est ung tres bel enfant, et de belle venue) nous demanda tres gracieusement et en langaige Francois, comment vous le faisies, et ou vous estiez ; et nous lui respondymes que vous estiez, a nostre partement, en tres bon point, et pensiesmez que lors esties en la Champaigne avec grant compaignie de gens darmes pour resister alencontre de ses ennemis et des vostres. Et apres aucunes menues gracieuses paroles que eusmes avec lui, nous fist retraire, et appella tous les princes dessus nommez, qui autour de lui se mirent a genoulz, et illec fist lire vos lettres ; et apres quils eurent parle ensemble aucune espace, feusmes rappelle, et nous fu dit par monseigneur le conte de Warewic que les lettres que aviesmes apporte depar vous contenoient creance, lequel le roy vouloit estre exposee par devant son grant conseil en sa ville de Londres le Mardi, ou Merquedi, ensuivant.

lords. And there we presented your letters to the king, and made the recommendations as best we knew and were able. The said king (who is a very beautiful child, and well grown,) asked us very graciously, and in the French language, how you were, and where you were ; and we replied that at our departure you were in excellent health, and we thought that you then were in Champagne with a great company of men-at-arms, to resist his enemies and your own. And after some gracious conversation which we had with him, he caused us to retire, and he called all the above-mentioned princes, who knelt around him, and there he caused your letters to be read ; and after that they had spoken together for some time, we were recalled, and my lord the earl of Warwick told us that the letters which we had brought from you contained a credence, which the king would wish to have reported before his great council in his city of London, on the Tuesday or Wednesday following.

Et illec, apres que eusmes prins congie ainsi quil appartient, retournasmes a Londres; et le Merquedi, ainsi que assigne nous estoit, venismes a Westmoustre devers les seigneurs qui estoient assemblez du grant conseil. Cest assavoir, les ducs de Bedford, de Gloucestre, monseigneur le cardinal, les archevesques de Cantorbie et Dyork, le chancellier Dangleterre, les contes de Warewic, de Nontonberlant, de Salseberi, et de Suffort, et chinq ou six autres grans seigneurs. Et illec fu par moy, Hue de Lannoy, expose la creance, tele que chargie maviez a vostre correction; apres laquelle oye, me dirent que je le baillasse par escript, pour sur ce avoir le roy son bon avis, dont nous nous excusasmes beaucoup, et par beaucoup de moiens. Mais finablement nous avons este constrains de le bailler par escript, ce que tres enuis avons fait; pour ce principalement que nous naviesmes aultre instruction que ce que vous, mon tres redoubte seigneur, en aviez dit de bouce a moy, Hue de Lannoy. Et le landemain leur

And from thence, after we had taken leave as ought to be done, we returned to London, and the Wednesday, as had been appointed us, we came to Westminster before the lords of the great council, who were assembled. That is to say, the dukes of Bedford, of Gloucester, my lord the cardinal, the archbishops of Canterbury and York, the chancellor of England, the earls of Warwick, Northumberland, Salisbury, and Suffolk, and five or six other great lords. And there by me, Hue de Lannoy, were exhibited the credentials, such as I had been charged with at your correction; after hearing which, they told me to deliver it in writing, in order that the king might have good deliberation upon it, for which we excused ourselves a great deal, and in many ways. But finally we were constrained to deliver it in writing, which we were much provoked to do; principally because we had had no other instruction except what you, my very redoubtable lord, had told me, Hue de Lannoy, verbally. And the next day we carried apportasmes par escript, ainsi que veoir pourrez par le semblable que avec ces presentes vous envoyons; et lors nous fu dit que pour ce que aviesmes expose que vous, mon tres redoupte seigneur, aviez sceu daucunes seigneurs certaines choses de quoy le roy povoit avoir grant aide et confort, et dont les aucuns pouroient avoir ung tres grant dommaige, comme il povoit sembler, que ce vaulsissions dire apart a monseigneur le cardinal, monseigneur larchevesque Dyork, et monseigneur le conte de Warewic, et ce fait, le plus brief que bonnement pourroient, feroit le roy response sur tout. Et le lendemain a lostel de monseigneur le cardinal leur deismes ce que aviesmez senti de monseigneur le duc de Bretaigne et monseigneur le conte de Richemont, et la maniere bien au long comment le roy sen pourroit aidier, en y gardant tousjours les meilleurs termes a lonneur de mes diz seigneurs de Bretaigne et de Richemont que faire se pourroit. Et aussi leur deismes que vostre entencion

it to them in writing, as you may see by the duplicate which we send you with these present letters; and then we were informed that, as we had stated, that you, my very redoubtable lord, had been informed by certain lords of certain things, through which the king might have great aid and comfort, and by which some others might sustain a very great damage, as it might appear, we would have the goodness to state this matter privately to my lord the cardinal, my lord the archbishop of York, and my lord the earl of Warwick, and when this was done, the king would make answer as speedily as possible on all points. And the next day, at the house of my lord the cardinal, we told them what you had ascertained from my lord the duke of Bretaigne and my lord the count of Richemont, in detail, and the manner how the king could help himself herein, keeping always the best terms possible for the honour of my said lords of Bretaigne and of Richemont. And we also told them that estoit de parler a monseigneur le duc de Savoye, pour savoir si de luy le roy pourroit avoir quelque ayde ; veu que len vous avoit rapporte quil estoit malcontent des ennemis du roy et des vostres ; et quil veus sembloit que le roy devoit fort contendre davoir lametee du dit duc de Savoye. Les quelles choses ils rechurent tres bien en gre ; et apres plusieurs interrogatoires a nous faites, et aussi plusieurs responses sur ce, leur deismes quil sembloit a plusieurs sages et notables que, se le roy vouloit venir a fin de sa guerre, il convenroit quil se aidast des grans et puissans seigneurs du royaume de France et pays denviron, et quil trouvast avec sa puissance Dangleterre maniere de les contenter de terres, seignouries et finances, etc.

Apres les quelles choses faites, et plusieurs diligences pour avoir nostre response, laquelle nous fu ballee le Mardy, vij. jour de Juillet. Cest assavoir, tous les princes dessus nommez presens, et le conte de Staffort, it was your intention to speak to my lord the duke of Savoy to know if the king could have some assistance from him ; since it had been told you that he was displeased with the enemies of the king and of yourself ; and that it appeared to you that the king ought to make every effort to have the friendship of the said duke of Savoy. These things they took in very good part ; and, after many questions had been put to us, and after many answers thereupon made, we told them that it appeared to many wise and notable men that, if the king wished to put an end to his war, it would be necessary that he should be assisted by the great and powerful lords of the kingdom of France and the neighbouring countries, and that with his power in England he should find means of contenting them with lands, estates, and money, &c.

After these things had been done, and we had used much diligence to have our answer, it was given to us on Tuesday the vij. day of July. That is to say, all the princes above-mentioned being present, and the earl of nous fut dit que le roy estoit tres contens de tres gracieuses lettres que lui aviez envoyees, et de la creance par nous exposee. Et pour ce que il avoient entendu que nul de nous ne devoit retourner devers vous, le roy vous escriroit ses lettres closes, et nous bailloit par escript la response sur ce que expose lui avions, le quel vous envoions avec ces presentes.

Et quant aux choses particulierement exposees par lordonnance du roy a monseigneur le cardinal, monseigneur larchevesque Dyork, et conte de Warewik, le roy de ce avoit charge mon dit seigneur le cardinal nous en faire la response.

Et en icellui jour meismes devers mon dit ^{Their} seigneur le cardinal, lequel nous dit en effect que le ^{second} roy vous prioit que vaulsissies toujours entretenir les ^{interview} besoignes entre les ducs de Savoye et de Bretaigne et ^{with the} conte de Richemont, et y faire le mieulx que pourriez ^{cardinal.} pour le bien du roy; et que de dessus, adonc que le parlement, que le roy a presentement assemble a

Stafford, it was told us that the king was very well pleased with the very gracious letters which you had sent him, and for the credence exhibited by us. And as he had heard that none of us were to return to you, the king would send his closed letters to you, and give us in writing the answer to what we had opened to him, which we send you along with these presents.

And as to the things particularly stated by the command of the king to my lord the cardinal, my lord the archbishop of York, and the earl of Warwick, the king had charged my said lord the cardinal to give us the answer to this.

And on the same day we went to my said lord the cardinal, who told us in effect that the king prayed you that you would always be so good as to carry on the business between the dukes of Savoy and of Bretagne and the count of Richemont, and do the best therein that you could for the good of the king. And that, moreover, until the parliament, which the king has at present as-

Londres, seroit fine, le roy ne povoit et impossible lui estoit de rien presenter, poursuir ne promettre envers les diz seigneurs ; mais incontinent le dit parlement fine, mon dit seigneur le cardinal tenoit pour certain que le roy envoieroit aucune notable ambaxade devers vous, pour avec vous en ce, et en plusieurs autres grans matieres qui presentement ne povoient estre declairez, traitter et besoigner. Et ce fait, allasmes prendre le congie du roy pour retourner pardeca.

Nostre tres redoubte seigneur, nous prions au Benoit Filz de Dieu, quil vous doinst bonne vie et longue.

sembled at London, shall be finished, the king could not, and it was impossible for him, to present, procure, or promise anything whatever to the said lords ; but that immediately the said parliament should be finished, my said lord the cardinal thought it certain that the king would send a notable embassy to you, along with you to treat of and consider this and many other great matters which at present could not be declared. And this being done, we went to take leave of the king to return home.

Our very redoubtable lord, we pray the blessed Son of God that He may give you a good and long life.

Written.—Your humble and obedient servants,
HUE DE LANNOY, LORD OF SANTES, and THE TREASURER OF BOULENOIS.

Our very redoubtable lord, we recommend ourselves to you as humbly as we best can. And may it please you

Et vous plaise savoir que apres ce que fusmes retournez a Londres de devers le roy, nous venismes a lostel dou conte de Souffort au lever de son disner, lou nous trouvassmes monseigneur Dorleans avec le dit comte, aus quelx nous feismes le reverence. Et incontinent monseigneur Dorleans nous prist par les mains, et nous demanda tres fort comment vous le faisies et ou vous esties, dont nous lui en deismes la verite, et comment vous voz recommandiez a lui tres fort, et esties desirant savoir de son bon estat, etc. A quoy il nous respondy quil estoit en bon point de corps, en desplaisance de ce quil usoit le meilleur temps de son eage prisonnier. A quoy je, Hue de Lannoy, luy respondy que encores, au plaisir de Dieu, en pourra bien yssir et par bonne maniere. Car se par son bon moien Deiux lui donnoit la grace que il peust traittier et estre moyen de la paix des deux royaumes, et de faire paix generale entre les royaumes et princes diceulx, il ne deveroit point plaindre les paines et dangiers quil a

to know that after we had returned to London, from having been before the king, we came to the house of the earl of Suffolk, as he was rising from his dinner, where we found my lord of Orleans with the said earl, to both of whom we made obeisance. And immediately my lord of Orleans took us by the hand, and asked us very anxiously how you were, and where you were, and we told him the truth, and how that you recommended yourself very earnestly to him, and that you desired to know of his good health, &c. To which he answered us that he was in good bodily health, but that he was distressed because he was spending the best part of his life in prison. To which I, Hue de Lannoy, answered, that still, by the pleasure of God, good might result from it, and in a good way. For if by his good agency God should give him the grace to treat and be the mediator of a peace between these two kingdoms, and to make a general peace between the realms and princes of the same, he ought not to complain of the pains and dangers he has portees. A quoy il respondy, "Vecy beau cousin de Suffort, qui sceut comment devers le roy Dangleterre et les seigneurs de son conseil je me suy presentez tousjours de my y employer, et encores fay ; mais je suy ainsi comme une espee qui est enfermee dedens une huge, dont len ne se peut aidier, qui ne le tire dehors ; et je ay tousjours dit, et encore diz, que je ny puis bonnement prouffiter se je ne parloye a aucuns de mes amis de France, par qui moien je peusse aidier a conduire la besongne ; et me semble que se je poveie avoir parle a aucuns especiaulx amis que jay, je y prouffiteroia beaucop. Car je cuide avoir des plus grans seigneurs dautour de monseigneur le roy de France, et de ceulx qui tiennent son party, qui feroient et vauldroient beaucop user par mon conseil au regart de paix generale. Et par la foy de mon corps, je desire tant la dite paix que je voudroye que je fusse cause et moyen de le avoir bien faite, et que icelle se deust bien entretenir, et sept jours apres lac-

gone through. To which he replied, "Here is my good cousin of Suffolk, who knows how I have always offered myself to the king of England and the lords of his council, to be employed therein, and I still do so ; but I am like a sword, shut up in a sheath, of which a man cannot avail himself unless he draws it ; and I have always said, and still do say, that I can be of no real use unless I speak to some of my friends of France, by which means I might help to advance the business ; and it appears to me that if I might have a conference with some of the especial friends that I have, I might therein be of much service. For I believe that there are among the greatest lords in the court of my lord the king of France, and those of his party, persons who would act, and who would be very pleased to act, according to my counsel with regard to the general peace. And by the faith of my body, so much do I desire the said peace, that I wish, provided I might be the cause and means of having it fully accomplished, and of its assured continuance, complissement de ce je deusse recevoir la mort. Et je oze bien dire devant vous, beau cousin de Suffort, que mon beau cousin de Bourgoingne et de Bretaigne y pevent plus, apres les parties principales, que prince qui vive."

Et lors je, Hue de Lannoy, respondy que je savoye de certain que vous, mon redoubte seigneur, estiez tant desirant la paix que chose qui fust en ce monde, pour obveir aux grans maulx qui journelment se font, et relever le poure peuple de France, qui a loccation de la guerre est tout destruit; et que a vous ne tenroit point, mais que plus y aideriez de tout vostre povoir. Et lors dit le conte de Suffort au dit monseigneur Dorleans, " Monseigneur, je vous ay bien toujours dit que monseigneur de Bourgoingne est bien dispose a paix." Et lors respondy monseigneur Dorleans, " De ce je ne fay nulle doubt; car je say bien que lui ne moy ne sommes point cause des maulx advenus ou royaulme de France; et de ce vous ay autrefois seven days after this were brought about, I would be willing to suffer death. And I venture to say before you, my fair cousin of Suffolk, that my good cousins of Burgundy and of Bretaigne could do more herein, after the principal parties, than any prince who lives."

And then I, Hue de Lannoy, replied, that I knew for certain that you, my redoubtable lord, were as desirous of this peace as of anything in this world, so as to obviate the great evils which arise daily, and to relieve the poor people of France, which on account of the war is totally ruined; and that the blame was not with you, but that you rather would aid therein with all your might. And then said the earl of Suffolk to my said lord of Orleans; " My lord, I have always told you that my lord of Burgundy is well disposed towards peace." And then my lord of Orleans replied, " Of this I have no doubt; for I well know that neither he, nor I, are the cause of the evils which have come upon the kingdom of France; and of this I formerly parle, messire Hue, et crecz que je suis encores en ce propos." Et lors me estraint la main et, qui plus est, me pincha par le bras tres fort, et par deux fois ; et veoye bien quil ne ozoit point dire ce quil eust bien voulu dire. Et lors derechief commenca a dire, "Je vouldroye que le roy Dangleterre me vaulsist emploier en ces besoingnes, en se tenant seur de ma personne. Car je ne desire point tant a traittier ma delivrance que je fay la dite paix. Et oze bien dire tout hault que je y puisse estre aussi grant moienn, ou plus, que homme qui vive." Et lors monseigneur de Suffort lui dit, "Orcha, monseigneur, le roy a bonne voulente dentendre a la ditte paix, et de vous y employer, car encores savez vous quil a de present donne sauf conduit a aucuns de vos gens pour venir devers vous." A quoy monseigneur Dorleans respondy, "Vous dites veoir, beau cousin, car je envoie briefment Camail, mon herault." Alors derechief il me commencha tres fort a demander de vous et de vostre estat ; et en verite il ne spoke to you, messire Hue, and believe me, I am still of this mind. And then he pressed my hand (and what is more) he squeezed me by the arm very strongly, and this he did twice ; and I very well saw that he did not dare to say what he would much have wished. And then he began to say again, "I wish that the king of England would employ me on these affairs, making himself sure of my person ; for I do not in the least desire so much to treat of my own deliverance as of this said peace. And I dare to say aloud, that I could therein be of as great an assistance, or greater, than any man alive." And then my lord of Suffolk said to him, "Well, my lord, it would be a pleasure to the king to hear of this said peace, and employ you in it, for you know that he has now given safe conduct to certain of your people to come to you." To which my lord of Orleans replied, "You speak truly, fair cousin, for I shall shortly send Camail, my herald." Then he began to ask me once more very anxiously about you and your health ; and truly he could not refrain se povoit appaisier de en parler ; en vous tres fort loant et souhaitant tres fort quil vous eust peu veoir et parler a vous.

Et apres toutes ces bonnes et gracieuses parolles presimes congie de lui et du dit conte de Suffort, au quel congie prendre me dist mon dit seigneur Dorleans, "Je vous prie, messire Hue, que me revenes encores veoir ;" et le dit conte prist la parole en disant, "Ils vous verront avant quils partent." Et en verite, nous noz sommes parcheuz par beaucoup de manieres de moyens que les dis Engles ne prendrent point bien en gre que nous, ne aucuns de vos gens ayent gaires de parolles au dit monseigneur Dorleans.

Et environ deux jours apres ce, vint devers nous ung appelle Jennin Cauvel, barbier du conte de Suffort, et une des gardes depar le dit conte mon dit seigneur Dorleans, et nous dist, "Jay toujours este vray et loyal Bourguignon, et aussy je suis natif du pays de monseigneur de Bourgoingne, de sa ville from speaking thereof, praising you very much and wishing very earnestly that he might be able to see and speak to you.

And after all these good and gracious words, we took leave of him and of the said earl of Suffolk, at which leave-taking my said lord of Orleans said to me, "I pray you, messire Hue, come again and see me ;" and the said earl began to speak, saying, "They will see you before they leave." And of a truth we perceived, by many ways and means, that the said English do not take it with good will, that either we, or any of your people, have any communication whatever with my said lord of Orleans.

And about two days after this came to us one called Jennin Cauvel, the barber of the earl of Suffolk, and one of the guards appointed by the said earl over my lord of Orleans, and he said to us, "I have always been a true and loyal Burgundian, and moreover I am a native of the country of my lord of Burgundy, of his town of Lille, and therefore I love

de Lisle, et si layme de tout mon cuer comme mon seigneur naturel. Et pour vous advertir, pour ce quon a fort parli que monseigneur Dorleans haoit fort monseigneur de Bourgoingne, et que sil povoit widier quil lui feroit de grans guerres et dommages, je vous promets par my foy pour ce que je parle Francois il se confie de sa grace plus a moy que en nulles de ses gardes, ne en personne qui soit en nostre hostel. Mais avant vostre venue, autant que jay este autour de lui, je lui ay oy dire tant de bien que merveilles de monseigneur de Bourgoigne, en monstrant quil layme de tout son coer, et men a parle le plus que de tout le remanant des seigneurs de France ; et povez dire hardiemment a monseigneur de Bourgoigne quil se teingne tout assure que monseigneur Dorleans ne veult que tout amour et amistie avec lui. Et se bon vous semble, et je puisse sentir que ce soit le plaisir de monseigneur de Bourgoingne par vous, tresorier de Boulenois, qui demourez pres Dangleterre, je me him with all my heart as my natural lord. And that I may caution you, since it has been openly said that my lord of Orleans thoroughly hates my lord of Burgundy, and that if he could escape, he would make fierce war on him, and do him much damage, I assure you on my faith, because I speak French, he is pleased to put more trust in me than in any other of his guards, or in any one whatever in our house. Before your arrival, as long as I have been near him, I have heard him say marvellously much good of my lord of Burgundy, showing that he loves him with all his heart, and he has spoken to me more of him than of all the rest of the lords of France ; and you may boldly tell my lord of Burgundy that he may hold himself perfectly assured that my lord of Orleans wishes nothing but perfect love and friendship with him. And if it seem good to you, and I may understand that it be the pleasure of my lord of Burgundy, by you, treasurer of Boulonois, you who live near England, I am very confident that I shall find good fay bien fort que je trouveray bien maniere de aler devers mon dit seigneur de Bourgoingne, et lui porter lettres de mon dit seigneur Dorleans, par lesquelles il pourra savoir sa bonne voulente. Et monseigneur de Bourgoingne ne vous ne prenez nulle deffiance sur moy, car, en verite, je suis vray Bourguignon ; et se je sentoye chose qui fust au dommaige de mon dit seigneur le duc, je men vauldroie acquitter de lui faire savoir comme a monseigneur."

Ce de quoy nous le merchiasmes beaucop depar vous, et lui chargeasmes quil deist a monseigneur Dorleans quil se tenist tout asseur que vous seriez toujours prest de vous employer a sa delivrance et faire tous les plaisirs que vous pourrez ; et quil nestoit point deceu sil vous aymoit, car aussi faisiez vous lui.

Et le lendemain presismes congie des diz monseigneur Dorleans et conte de Suffort ; lequel monseigneur Dorleans nous dist que le voulsissons recommander envers vous, en disant, " Beau cousin de Suffort, pour-means of going to my said lord of Burgundy and carry letters to him from my said lord of Orleans, by which he may know of his good will. And neither my lord of Burgundy nor you need feel any apprehension about me, for assuredly I am a true Burgundian ; and if I discovered anything that was to the hurt of my said lord the duke, I would wish herein to do my duty by letting him know, since he is my lord."

For this we thanked him much from you, and we charged him that he should say to my lord of Orleans that he should consider it as a certainty that you would always be ready to employ yourself for his deliverance, and do him all the pleasure possible ; and that he was not at all deceived if he loved you, for you do the same towards him.

And the next day we took leave of my said lord of Orleans and the earl of Suffolk ; and my lord of Orleans asked me to be so good as to recommend him to you, saying, " My fair cousin of Suffolk, might I not write a letter to roie je point escripre unes lettres a beau cousin de Bourgoingne ?” A quoy le dit conte de Suffort respondy : “ Monseigneur, vous y adviserez encore nuit ;” et lendemain nous envoya monseigneur de Suffort par le dit Cauvel unes lettres a vous adrechans, lesquelles nous vous envyions ; mais le dit Cauvel nous dist que mon dit seigneur Dorleans ne pot lors avoir license de vous escrire.

Your humble and obedient servants,

[TRANSLATION.]

OUR very redoubtable lord, we recommend ourselves to you as humbly as may be possible. And to advertise you on many matters which at many times and from divers

pluseurs fois et diverses personnes avons oyés en nostre voyage Dangleterre, il vous plaise savoir ;—

Premiers, le roy fist commençier son parlement le viij. jour de ce present mois de Jullet ; auquel parlement sont toz assemblez les princes, prelats et estas du royaume, et sans faulte ilz y sont en tres grant nombre ; et ainsi que nous avons peu sentir, il est taillie de durer pour tout le mois Daoust, ou plus. Et adeeque nous avons peu sentir, entre autres materes ils mettront avant ou de prendre paix avec le dauphin, telle quelle pourront avoir, ou de trouver finance pour mettre sus aucune tres grant et puissant armee. Car ad ce que nous porons percevoir, il ont bien congnoissance que le fait de France ne puet pas longuement durer en lestat ou il est de present.

Item, quant nous eusmes prins congie du conte de conversa-Suffort, il dist a moy, Hue de Lannoy, a part, "Faittes tion with the earl of savoir, ou dites, a monseigneur de Bourgoingne har-Suffolk,

persons we have heard in our journey to England, may it please you to know ;—

Firstly, the king caused his parliament to begin on the viij. day of this present month of July ; at which parliament are assembled all the princes, prelates and estates of the kingdom, and without failing they are there in very great numbers ; and from what we have been able to discover, it is likely to continue the whole month of August, or longer. And from what we have been able to learn, among other things, they exert themselves either to make peace with the dauphin, upon whatever terms they can obtain it, or to find money to raise a very large and powerful army. For from what we can perceive, they very well know that the affairs of France cannot long continue in the state in which they are now.

Item, when we had taken leave of the earl of Suffolk he said to me, Hue de Lannoy, apart, "Let my lord of Burgundy know decidedly (or tell him yourself,) that I

diment que je ay plus grant esperance en paix gene rale que je neuch oncques mais ; et les gens que
monseigneur Dorleans fait venir presentiment arrivez
pardeca devers lui, auxquels le roy a donne sauf conduit, jen pense a savoir plus avant." Et lors lui demandais qui estoient lez diz ambaxadeurs. Il me
nomma les noms ; mais en verite je nen ay retenu
que lun, cest assavoir, Hue de Saint Marcq, lautre
est un maistre Dorleans, et le tiers ung des secre
taires du daulphin. Et encore me dist, "Se les choses
se portent ainsi que journee de paix soit prinse, y
convendra que monseigneur de Bourgoingne y viengne ;
car se la chose doit venir a bien, il fauldra que plu sieurs grans seigneurs en soient assemblez." A quoy je luy respondy que jesperoye quant la venroit que
vous feriez toujours tellement vostre devoir que len en devroit estre bien contens. Et me dist oultre que incontinent que aucune chose en sera deliberee, len le vous fera savoir.

have greater hope of a general peace than I ever had before ;
and on the arrival of the people, whom my lord of Orleans
presently shall cause to come from hence to him, to whom the king has given a safe conduct, I hope to know still more about it." And then I asked him who were the said am bassadors. He mentioned their names to me, but in truth I have only remembered one, that is to say, Hue de Saint Marcq, the other is a master of Orleans, and the third one of the secretaries of the dauphin. And he also said to me,
" If things are so settled that a conference is fixed for the peace, it would be necessary that my lord of Burgundy should come there ; for if the thing is to come to any good,
it would be necessary that many great lords should be assembled." To which I replied that I hoped that when it should happen, you would always do your duty in such a way that they would be well content with it. And he told me moreover that directly anything should be de termined on, they would let you know.

Item, au prendre congie de monseigneur le cardinal, with cardinal, and il nous dist, "Vous povez seurement faire savoir a with the beau nepveu de Bourgongne que ce parlement de- earl of party, (lequel se departira ou sur paix ou sur troubles, ou pour faire plus forte guerre que onques mais,) Warwick.
incontinent jespoire que le roy envoiera devers beau
nepveu vostre maistre pour apointier avec lui tele-
ment que len entendra li ungs lautre, et que chascun
scara ce quil aura a faire, et comment on se pourra et aura a gouverner."

Item, et quant nous preismes congie de monseigneur Intelli-de Warewie, qui se recommandoit a vous, il nous dist gence entre plusieurs parolles, "Si Dieux me ayt, entre nous respecting Englois (a vous feablement dire,) avons prins une tres grant desplaisance et merancolie de ce que tandis que le roy a este en France, monseigneur de Bourgoingne, vostre maistre, ne la onques veu ne venu devers lui. Et par le foy de mon corps, je vouldroye avoir perdu le moiete de ma revenue pour
ung an, et monseigneur de Bourgongne fust pardeca

Item, on taking leave of my lord the cardinal, he said to us, "You can assuredly make known to my good nephew of Burgundy that when this parliament rises, (which it will do whenever there is either peace, or trouble, or in order that a greater war than ever before be made), I hope that the king will immediately send to my good nephew, your master, to arrange with him so that they shall mutually understand each other, and that each one will know what he has to do, and how they shall be able to arrange.

Item, and when we took leave of my lord of Warwick, who recommended himself to you, he said to us, among many words, "As may God have me ! we English, to tell you the truth, are exceedingly displeased and disappointed that, whilst the king was in France, my lord of Burgundy, your master, has neither seen him nor visited him. And by the faith of my body, I would willingly have lost the half of my revenue for a year, if my lord of Burgundy came here for fifteen days, for quinze jours, car certes il ny trouveroit que bien et honneur, et tout en vaulroit mieulx." A quoy je lui dis, entre autres choses, puis quil parloit francement, que aussi feriesmes nous a lui ; et lors deismes comment se pourroit telle chose faire selon les cruelles parolles que len ot journellement par ceste ville, en disant tous les maulx que len povoit dire de monseigneur de Bourgoingne, en le manechant lui et ses pays. A quoy il repundy, "Ce ne sont que menues gens qui dient telz parolles, mais il ne trouveroit nulle faulte es princes, ne en ceulx qui ont le puissance ou gouvernement du dit royauleme ; et monseigneur son pere en plaine guerre vint bien devers le roy en sa ville de Calais, ou len ne lui fist que tout bien et honneur." Sur quoy nous respondimes que le roy devenoit grant, et venoit au plaisir de Dieu brief en France, et lors, se Dieu plaist, venriez devers luy.

surely, he would only find good and honor, and all would be the better for it." To which I answered, among other things, that since he had spoken frankly we would do the same to him ; and then we asked how could such a thing be done after the harsh words that one heard daily in this town, where was said all the evil that could be spoken of my lord of Burgundy, menacing him and his lands. To which he replied, "They are only low people who speak such words, but he would find no fault with the princes, nor with those who have the power or government of the said kingdom, and my lord his father in open war went to the king in his town of Calais, where they offered him nothing but all good and honor." Upon which we replied that the king was growing up, and if it were the will of God would shortly come to France, and then if it please God you would come to him.

Item, my lord the duke of Bretaigne has always had, while we have been there, three ambassadors with him.

depar lui. Cest assavoir ; messire Thomas Thissac, chevalier du pays Dirlande, maistre Jehan Pregent, docteur en loix, du pays de Bretaigne, et maistre Jehan Godart, secretaire de mon dit seigneur de Bretaigne. Mais onques ils nont parle a nous, et si estiesmes logie bien pres li uns de de lautre. Et ad ce que avons peu sentir, ils y sont pour aucunz traittiez tendans a la delivrance de monseigneur Dorleans, et aussi poursievant certain grant dommaige que leur ont fait les Englois sur la mer, et plus avant nen savons a la verite. Et avons veu empres le roy Gilles, monseigneur, fil le duc de Bretaigne, qui se recommande humblement a vous, et en verite cest un tres gracieux et habille enfant.

Item, Camail, herault de monseigneur Dorleans, et aussi d'autre part Jennin Cauvel, barbier de monseigneur le conte de Suffort, lun en l'absence de lautre, ont dit a moy, Hue de Lannoy, entre plusieurs parolles, et de leur mouvement, que se le

That is to say, messire Thomas Thissac, a knight of the country of Ireland, master Jehan Pregent, doctor in laws, of the country of Bretaigne, and master Jehan Godart, secretary of my said lord of Bretaigne. But they have spoken nothing to us, although we were lodged very near the one to the other. And from what we have been able to perceive, they are there for some treaties tending to the deliverance of my lord of Orleans, and also they are prosecuting for some great damages that the English have done to them on the sea ; but more hereof we do not know certainly. And we saw in the king's company my lord Gilles, son of the duke of Bretaigne, who humbly recommends himself to you ; and truly he is a very gracious and clever child.

Item, Camail, the herald of my lord of Orleans, and also on the other hand Jennin Cauvel, the barber of my lord the earl of Suffolk, the one in the absence of the other, has said to me, Hue de Lannoy, among many words, and of their own free will, that if the dauphin daulphin et les seigneurs d'autour de lui ne veuellent entendre a paix, et par ce moyens a la delivrance de mon dit seigneur Dorleans, pourtant mon dit seigneur Dorleans na pas entention de soy laissier perdre ne demouerer toujours ou point ou il est. Mais lui ont oy dire que sil pouvoit avoir parle a vous, mon tres redoubte seigneur, a monseigneur le duc de Bretaigne, et ou bastard Dorleans, son frere, que encore trouvera il bien maniere de sa delivrance ; et plus avant ne men ont declarez.

Item, et nous arrive a Calais a nostre retour Dangleterre, trouvassmes Jehan de Saveuse, qui tout droit venoit Dorleans, et nous dist quil avoit este devers le daulphin. Et nous luy demandasme quel apparence de paix generale len avoit par dela. Il nous dist que moiennant la delivrance de monseigneur Dorleans, sans laquelle rien ne sen seroit, tout tendroit bien a paix, mais ce seroit par ainsi que les Englois navoient point la couronne, car de ce ne failleroit il and the lords of his party will not hear of peace, and (by this means) of the deliverance of my said lord of Orleans, nevertheless my said lord of Orleans has no intention to allow himself to be ruined, nor will he always live in the state in which he now is. But they have heard him say that if he could have spoken to you, my very redoubtable lord, to my lord the duke of Bretaigne, or to the bastard of Orleans, his brother, he would still find ample means for his deliverance ; and more than this they have not declared to me.

Item, and when we arrived at Calais on our return from England, we found Jehan de Saveuse, who had come straight from Orleans, and he told us he had been with the dauphin. And we asked him what appearance there was of general peace there. He told us that if my lord of Orleans were delivered, without which nothing could be, all would be tending towards peace, provided that the English should not have the crown, for on this point he tenir nulles parolles ; mais aultrement len trouveroit tous bons traittiez. Et nous dist que presentement le daulphin avoit fait une grant assemblee des estats de ses pays ; et y estoient devers lui le duc Dalenchon, le conte de Fois, le conte de Clermont ; et encores disoit on que le comte de Richemont y devoit venir, et ny estoit point le seigneur de la Trimoille, car il lavoit laissie a Sully, environ a huit jours, et disoit quil esperoit que le dit seigneur de la Tremoille nauroit plus tel auctorite autour du daulphin quil souloit. Et entre autres paroles me dist que apres le siege de Montargies leve, le dit seigneur de la Tremoille dist au Bastard Dorleans, "Pourquoy nalez vous au devant du duc de Bourgoingne, qui sen vient en Bourgoingne ? on ne lara jamais en meilleur place." A quoy le dit Bastard respundy, quil ne lui vouloit nul mal, car il savoit bien que monseigneur de Bourgoingne ne haoit point monsieur son frere, et aussi son frere ne haoit point mon dit seigneur de

(the dauphin) would admit of no compromise ; but otherwise good terms might easily be obtained. And he told us that at this time the dauphin had made a great assembly of the estates of his country ; and there were with him the duke of Alençon, the count of Fois, the count of Clermont. And it was also said that the count of Richemont would come thither, and the lord de la Trimoille was not there, for he had left him at Sully about eight days ago, and he said that he hoped that the said lord de la Tremoille would no longer have such authority with the dauphin as he used to have. And among other things he told me that after the raising of the siege of Montargis, the said lord de la Tremoille said to the bastard of Orleans, "Why do you not go to the duke of Burgundy, who is coming to Burgundy ? you will never have a better place." To which the said Bastard replied, that he did not wish him any ill, for he well knew that my lord of Burgundy does not hate my lord his brother, and also his brother

Bourgoingne. Et demanda le dit Jehan de Saveuse a moy, Hue de Lannoy, quel chiere mon dit seigneur Dorleans nous avoit faite, et je lui respundy que tres bonne. Et lors il dit, "Certes monsieur le duc de Bourgoingne se puet tenir seur que mon dit seigneur Dorleans laime de tout son coer, et a parfaitte fiance en lui."

of France,

Item, et pour advertir de toutes les parolles que durant nostre ambaxade avons eu avec monsieur le regent, il est vray que ainsi que nous arrivasmes a Calais, mon dit seigneur le regent, et madame, et leur compagnie widoient les portes pour aler monter en la mer pour passer en Angleterre, et lors luy feismes la reverence; et incontinent demanda a moy, Hue de Lannoy, "Dont venez vous, et ou voulez vous aler?" Et lui dis que vous nous envoiez en Angleterre, ou nous vaulriesmes desja estre, se pooresmes trouver passage. Et lors il dist, "Je vous ferai delivrer did not hate my said lord of Burgundy. And the said Jehan de Saveuse asked me, Hue de Lannoy, what cheer my said lord of Orleans had made us, and I replied that it was very good. And then he said, "Certainly my lord the duke de Burgundy may hold himself quite assured that my said lord of Orleans loves him with all his heart, and has perfect confidence in him.

Item, and to advertise you of all the conversation which we have had with my lord the regent during our embassy ; true it is that as we arrived at Calais, my said lord the regent, and madame, and their company, were leaving the port to embark to cross the sea for England. And then we made him our reverence ; and immediately he asked me, Hue de Lannoy, "Whence came you, and where are you going ?" And I told him that you were sending us into England, where we would have been already if we could have found the means of crossing. Then he said " I will cause a transport to be delivered to you," which vaissel," ce que incontinent nous fist; car il nous fist mettre ou ballenjer de Calais.

Item, nous a este certifie par les contes de Warwic who speaks et Souffort, que quant nous presentasmes vos lettres kindly of au roy, et que len nous fist retraire, mon dit seigneur of Bur-le regent fist au roy tres grans recommendations de gundy. vous, en vous tres fort loant, et en disant plusieurs biens et honneurs de vous. Et semblablement nous ont jure et afferme par leurs fois que ens ou grant conseil il sest. acquittez de dire beaucoup de biens et de honneurs de vous, en disant, "Combien quil y ait aucunes manieres de malveillance entre beau frere et moy, pourtant ne veul je pas laissier a me acquitter envers monseigneur le roy, en entre vous, de dire les grans biens et services que lui a fait beau frere de Bourgoingne, et fait de jour en jour," en parlant de vous en tres grant honneur.

Item, le jour avant nostre partement je, Hue de Lannoy, men alay devers lui pour dire adieu, et aussi immediately he did, for he caused us to be despatched in a balenger of Calais.

Item, it has been certified to us by the earls of Warwick and Suffolk that when we presented your letters to the king, and we were required to withdraw, my said lord the regent made great recommendations of you to the king, praising you very greatly, and speaking of you much to your honour. And likewise they have sworn and affirmed to us by their faith that in a great council he did his duty in saying much that was to your good and honor, saying, "Although there may be some appearance of ill-will between my good brother and me, nevertheless I will not refrain from discharging my duty towards my lord the king, to say among you, how great have been the good deeds and services that my good brother of Burgundy has done to him, and still does from day to day;" speaking of you with very great honor.

Item, the day before our departure, I, Hue de Lannoy, went to him to say farewell, and also to madame his

a madame la regente, savoir sils vouloient riens mander es marches de Picardie; et apres plusieurs parolles gracieuses me dist mon dit seigneur le regent a part, " Messire Hue, je say bien que vous amez beau frere de Bourgoingne, aussi croy je que vous ne me haiez point. Je vous promets par ma foy, quil me desplaist bien que beau frere a tel ymagination contre moy; car je ne le hech point; est lun des princes de ce monde que jai toujours le plus ame. Et ay bien connoissance que les maniers que tenons sont grande-ment prejudiables a monsieur le roy et a la chose publique. Et non obstant tout, je ne delaisseray je a faire le bien du roy, ne aussi des pays et subgez de beau frere; car encores, se Dieu plaist, serons en tel amiste que avons este par cy devant et ce devons estre."

wife, to know if they wished to send anything to the marches of Picardy; and after many gracious words my lord the regent said to me apart, " Messire Hue, I know well how much you love my good brother of Burgundy; I also believe that you do not hate me. I assure you, by my faith, that it displeases me much that my good brother has such an ill opinion against me; for I do not hate him, he is one of the princes of this world whom I have always loved the most. And I well know that the attitude we have assumed is very prejudicial to my lord the king and the public good. And notwithstanding all this, I shall not discontinue to act for the good of the king, nor for the country and subjects of my good brother; for yet, if it please God, we shall enjoy such friendship as we have before this time, and still ought to enjoy."

Your humble and obedient servants,

HUE DE LANNOY, LORD OF SANTES, and THE TREASURER OF BOULENOIS.

Monsieur de Varembon est a Londres, ou il pour-sieut aucune besongne devers le roy et les seigneurs, le quel, pour honneur de vous, nous a fait accom-paigner et faist tout honneur quil a peu; et ma dit quil ne peut finer davoir Nogent ne Montigny. Et lui retourne par deca, il vous pourra dire plusieurs menues nouvelles, car len ne se garde pas si pres de lui: par dela comme on fait de plusieurs autres, et si se recommande a vous tres humblement; et en verite, il se presente tres fort de vous faire service.

Monsieur de Varembon is in London, where he is pursuing some business with the king and the lords; who, out of honour to you, accompanied us and did us all the honour that he could; and he said to me that he could not succeed in having Nogent or Montigny. And when he returns home, he will be able to tell you much news, for they do not watch him so closely there as they do many others; and he recommends himself to you very humbly, and truly he is very anxious to do you service.

articles exposez et ballez par escript par messire Hue de Lannoy, seigneur de Santes, chevalier, et le tresorier de Boulenois, ambaxadeurs envoyez devers le roy, nostre dit seigneur, par monseigneur le duc de Bourgongne.

Quant au premier, second, tiers et quart articles ; le roy, nostre dit seigneur, remercye mon dit seigneur de Bourgongne, son bel oncle, de ce quil lui a signifie et fait savoir lestat de son royaume de France, et des advertisement et conseil que il lui donne, pour remedier et pourveoir aux inconveniens et afflictions que sueffre le peuple de son dit royaume a l'occasion des guerres dicellui. Les quels inconveniens mon dit seigneur de Bourgongne supplie et desire estre ostez par paix, ou longue abstinenace generale ; au aultrement, pour faire tele et si forte guerre que lorgueil des ennemis puist estre abatus, et par ce moyent contrains de venir a la dite paix, ou abstinenace. Et quant a ce matiere, pieca feu nostre saint pere Martin exhorta and given in writing by messire Hue de Lannoy, lord of Santes, knight, and the treasurer of the Boulenois, ambassadors sent to the king, our said lord, by my lord the duke of Burgundy.

As to the first, second, third and fourth articles ; the king, our said lord, thanks my said lord of Burgundy, his good uncle, for having signified and made known to him the state of his kingdom of France, and for the advice and counsel which he has given him to remedy and provide against the damages and afflictions which the people of his said kingdom suffer on account of his said wars. Which damages my said lord of Burgundy supplicates and desires should be taken away by peace, or a long general truce ; or, on the other hand, to make such and so terrible a war, that the pride of the enemies may be lowered, and by this means they be compelled to come to the said peace or truce. And as to this matter, some time ago our late holy father, pope Martin, exhorted my lord the cardinal monseigneur le cardinal Dangleterre a ce quil se voulsist employer envers le roy, dentendre au bien dicelle paix, et ainsi le fit mon dit seigneur le cardinal a Calais; lequel trouva le roy en ceste partie tres enclin et bien dispose; et depuis, mon dit seigneur de Bourgongne a ce mesme effet en supplia au roy, lui estant a Rouen, au quel temps monseigneur le cardinal de Sancte Croix vint pardevers lui pour celle mesme cause; et par grant avis et memo deliberation de conseil, en consideracion a la requeste et conseil de mon dit seigneur de Bourgongne, lui fu respondu depar le roy quil estoit toujours prest et enclin de bonne voulente entendre a tous bons, amiabes, et raisonnables moyens de paix, ou de bonne, seure et ferme abstinenice de guerre, sans communicacion de la quelle response fu tres content icelui cardinal. Et ceste response fist le roy incontinent savoir a mon dit seigneur, devers lequel ala le dit cardinal de Sainte Croix, et peu de temps apres retourna a Paris et a Corbeuil, ausquels lieux communiquerent ensemble of England to employ himself in causing the king to listen to this peace, as did my said lord the cardinal at Calais; who found the king well inclined and disposed thereto; and since then, my said lord of Burgundy supplicated the king to the same effect, he being at Rouen, at which time my lord the cardinal de Sancte Croix came to him for this same cause, and by great advice and even by deliberation of council, in consideration of the request and advice of my said lord of Burgundy, it was replied to him by the king that he was always ready and inclined to hear, with good will, all good, amiable, and reasonable means of peace, or of good, sure, and firm abstinenice from war; without the communication of which reply the said cardinal was very well pleased. And the king made this reply known immediately to my said lord, to whom the said cardinal de Saint Croix went, and a short time after he returned to Paris and to Corbeil, at which places my lord the regent, monseigneur le regent, duc de Bedford et lui, et furent offers au dit cardinal de Sancte Croix, comme mediateur dicelle paix, plusieurs lieux notables et seurs pour convenir les ambaxadeurs des parties ; et apres grant longueur de temps, le dauphin refusa, et ne voulut prendre ou choisir quelconque lieu se non Nevers ou Aucerre tant seulement ; et non obstant que ung chascun des diz lieux de Nevers et Aucerre fut difficile et dangereux au regard des chemins pour les gens du roy, qui estoient ordonnez pour convenir, neantmoins pour le bien de paix, a la quelle le roy est toujours incline, et se mettre en tout devoir, envoia ses dits gens au dit lieu Daucerre, et pareillement mon dit seigneur de Bourgongne et monseigneur de Bretaigne y envoyerent les leurs, lesquels longuement attendirent les gens du dit daulphin. Et finablement eulx venus, il ne firent quelconque ouverture de paix, ne vouldrent entendre a quelconque abstinence ; mais dirent sil estoit aucune esperance de paix, il estoit besoing que les seigneurs de France, prisonniers en the duke of Bedford and he communicated with each other ; and many well-known and safe places for convening the ambassadors of the parties were offered to the said cardinal as the mediator of this peace ; and after a considerable length of time the dauphin refused, nor would he take nor choose any place except Nevers or Auxerre, only ; and notwithstanding that each of the said places, Nevers and Auxerre, were difficult and dangerous as regards the roads for the king's men who were appointed to meet there, nevertheless, for the good of the peace, for which the king is still inclined, and to do his duty to the utmost, he sent his said men to the said town of Auxerre, and in like manner my said lord of Burgundy and my lord of Bretaigne sent theirs thither, where they waited a long time for the men of the said dauphin. And when at last they did come, they made no overture of peace whatever, nor would they hear of any truce ; but they said if there was any hope of peace, it was necessary that the lords of France, who are prisoners in Angleterre, feussent menez en aucun lieu oultre la mer, pour avoir leur conseil et avis en la dite matiere. Et quant a la traittie ou abstinence, ils nen bailleroient point; et sils la balloient, elle seroit de petit effect; disans aulcuns deulx que se leur maistre avoit cent mille escus, si ne la pouverent il faire garder, pour ce quil nestoit servi en sa guerre que destrangiers, ausquels il a abandonne le pais, et non obeissent a lui en ceste partie. Et a fin que en la dite matiere neust rupture, fu prise a lexortation du dit cardinal une aultre journee entre eulx pour convenir a Corbueil et a Melun vers la fin de Mars derrenierement passe, au quel lieu de Corbueil compairerent les diz cardinal et gens du roy, notre dit seigneur, et ceulx de mon dit seigneur de Bourgongne. Et si fist savoir a mon dit seigneur le regent mon dit seigneur de Bretaigne quil estoit prest de tenir, garder, et accepter tout ce que par le roy seroit conclu et accorde en la dicte matiere; et dillec en certain village entre Cor-

England, should be conducted to some place across the sea, that their advice and counsel in the said matter might be had. And as to the treaty or truce, they would give none; or if they did give it, it would be of little effect; some of them saying that if their master had a hundred thousand crowns, he could not make them keep it, because he had only employed strangers in his war, to whom he abandoned the country, and they would not obey him in this thing. And in order that there should be no rupture in this said matter, by the advice of the said cardinal another day was settled between them to meet at Corbeil and at Melun, towards the end of March last, at which town of Corbeil the said cardinal and the men of the king, our said lord, appeared, and also those of my said lord of Burgundy. And my said lord of Bretaigne made known to my said lord the regent, that he was ready to hold, keep, and accept, all that might be concluded and accorded by the king in the said matter; and from thence the said men of bueil et Melun comparerent les dittes gens du roy avec les ambaxadeurs du dit daulphin, ausquels ils signifierent de plus au plus la bonne voulente et disposition du roy, nostre dit seigneur, et comment il faisoit mener a Douvre, qui est le plus prouchain port vers France, les dis seigneurs prisonniers, offrants baillir a ceulx de partie adverse, qui vouldroient venir, saufs conduiz et seurtes pour parler a eulx; a quoy ne firent aucune response les gens du dit daulphin, mais dirent quils le rapporteroient a leur maistre, et en feroient savoir sa voulente, pour laquelle avoir a este longuement le dit cardinal de Sainte Croix pardevers lui, qui finablement a reporte son consentement et offre pour avoir trieve seulement pour quatre mois, sans ce que mention ait este faitte de sa venue ne communication des diz seigneurs prisonniers qui longuement ont este a Dovere, et monseigneurs le regent, de Gloucestre, et cardinal Dangleterre, les chancelliers et conseils de France et Dangleterre a Calais aussi par

the king met with the ambassadors of the said dauphin at a certain village between Corbeil and Melun, to whom they signified more and more the good will and disposition of the king, our said lord, and how that he caused the said captive lords to be conducted to Dover, which is the port nearest to France, offering to provide those of the adverse party, who wished to come, with a safe conduct and sureties, to speak with them; to which the men of the said dauphin made no answer, but said that they would report it to their master, and would make known his will about it, to have which the said cardinal de Sainte Croix has been a long time with him, who finally brought back his consent, and offer to have a truce for four months only, without any mention being made of his coming, nor the communication of the said captive lords, who had been a long while at Dover. And my lord the regent, my lord of Gloucester and the cardinal of England, the chancellors and councillors of France and England, have also been for a long long temps, en esperance que le dit adversaire deust envoier ses dittes gens pour parler aus diz seigneurs prisonniers, ainsi quil avoit desire, pour le bien dicelle paix. Les quels seigneurs prisonniers ont este moult troublez et desplaisans de ce que on nest venu devers eux pour le dit bien ; au quel bien le roy les treuve tres despose et prests deulx emploier en toutes manieres pour icelui bien, ainsi que les diz seigneurs, mesmement le duc Dorleans, a fait savoir a ses gens et officiers en France.

Les quelles choses considerees, puet chacun connoistre comment le roy, nostre dit seigneur, sest mist et met grandement en son devoir, et na pas tenu, ne tient a lui, que len nait entendre au bien de paix, et que encore on ny entende ; mais a tenu et tient au dit dauphin. Et voit len bien que la trive de quatre mois, quil a offert, est pour advitailler, le temps pendant dicelle, les places et lieux a lui obeissans, qui en ont grand besoing, et rompre et empescher les sieges, time at Calais, hoping that the said adversary would send his said agents to speak with the said captive lords, as it had been desired, for the good of this said peace. And these captive lords have been much troubled and displeased, because no one has come to them, on the subject of the said peace ; for which good the king finds them well disposed and ready to employ themselves in every manner for this end, as the said lords, especially the duke of Orleans, has made known to his men and officers in France.

These things being considered, every one may know how the king, our said lord, has acted and acts for the best according to his duty, and that it is not, nor was it, to be attributed to him that no heed had been given to the matter of the peace, and that no attention is yet being given thereto ; but that all this was to be, and still is to be, attributed to the said dauphin. And one sees very well that the truce of four months, which he has offered, is, that during this period he may provision the places and towns obedient to him, which have great need of it, and to break armees et enterprises du roy, notre dit seigneur, et de mon dit seigneur de Bourgongne, qui ne sont pas de petit ftrait ; comme le siege de Saint Walery, larmee de monseigneur de Huntyngton, la charge de monseigneur de Arondel, et la finance baillée pour la France.

Puet on aussi considerer que la trieve des diz quatre mois ne puet estre pour le roy et ses subgiez daucun effect prouffitable. Car en si petit de temps pou de bien en si haulte matiere se pourroit ensuivir, et a peine souffriroit le dit temps pour choisir et eslire lieu de ouverir et entendre aux seurtez qui pour la dite trieve seroient necessaires ; mais en plus grant longueur de trieve se pourroient trouver moiens de paix, se en la partie adverse ne tient.

6, 7, & 8.
Item, au regard des v., vj., viij., et viij. articles, le roy, nostre dit seigneur, considere bien que continuation de guerre est destruction de pais, et si considere bien aussi les grans diligence, frais et despences qui fait

and hinder the sieges, armies and enterprises of the king, our said lord, and of my said lord of Burgundy, which are not of little expense; such as the siege of Saint Valery, the army of my lord of Huntingdon, the charge of my lord of Arundel, and the finance given for France.

One may also consider that the truce of the said four months cannot be of any profitable effect for the king and his said subjects. For in so short a time very little good could be done in so important a matter, and the said time would scarcely suffice to choose and select a place to open and hear the sureties who were necessary for the said truce; but if the truce were longer, means might be found for making peace, if the adverse party was not against it.

Item, with regard to the v., vj., viij. and viij. articles, the king, our said lord, considers well that a continuation of the war is the destruction of the country, and he considers well also, the great diligence, outlay, and expende present mon dit seigneur de Bourgongne pour resister aux diz ennemis, qui ne luy ont tenu aucune promesse de abstinence, de quoy il le remercie de tout son cuer, et lui prie que semblablement il ait regard et consideration a son jeune aage, et aux tres sumptueuses et grans charges quil a eues a supporter depuis le premier an de son dit aage jusques a ores, et suppose encores de jour en jour. Car pour bouter la guerre oultre, et esloigner les dis ennemis de Picardie, France et Normandie, il soulloit maintenant pour quatre mois le nombre de gens qui sensuivent. Cest assavoir, pour recouvrer Saint Walery, qui a este de nouvel pris en la trieve de mon dit seigneur de Bourgongne, et autres forteresses a l'environ, seize cent combatans, soubz monseigneur de Saint Pol, avec cinq cent combatans que mon dit seigneur de Bourgongne a accorde y mettre a ses despens pour la deffense de la France ; douze cent combatans soubz monseigneur de Huntyngton, pour tenir les champs es basses marches diture which at present my said lord of Burgundy is making to resist the said enemies, who have not kept any promise of truce ; for which he thanks him with all his heart, and prays him in like manner to have regard and consideration to his youth, and the very heavy burdens he has had to bear since the first year of his said life until the present time, and still bears from day to day. For to make an end of the war and to drive the said enemies from Picardy, France, and Normandy, he is now paying for four months the following number of men. That is to say, to recover St. Valery, which has been newly taken during the truce of my said lord of Burgundy, and other fortresses thereabouts, sixteen hundred men-at-arms under my lord of Saint Pol, along with five hundred men-at-arms, whom my said lord of Burgundy has agreed to place there at his expense for the defence of France ; twelve hundred men-at-arms under my lord of Huntingdon, to hold the country of the lower borders of Normandy ; nine hundred de Normendie ; neuf cent combatans soubz monseigneur Darondel, sans les garnisons gisans en forteresses de France, Normendie, Anjou et Le Maine ; qui sont plus de six mille combatans. Par la diligence des quelz, et de larmee que a mise sus presentement mon dit seigneur de Bourgongne, le roy, nostre dit seigneur, a esperance que en ceste saison notables explois de guerre et grans recouvrances de pais se feront, al aide de mon dit seigneur. Porquoy grant nombre des subgiez de roy et de mon dit seigneur de Bourgongne pourront vivre en plus grant repos et seurete quils nont fait par cy avant.

Item, en tant que touche les ix., x., xj. articles ; pour ce que en aulcuns diceulx mon dit seigneur de Bourgongne requiert avoir quatre cent combatans, ou la finance pour les paier, a fin de les joindre avec larmee ordonnee par mon dit seigneur de Bourgongne soubs messire Jehan de Luxembourg, conte de Liney, pour la seurte de la Picardie, se offre aussi de bonne men-at-arms under my lord of Arundel, exclusive of the garrisons lying in the fortresses of France, Normandy, Anjou and Le Maine ; which are more than six thousand men-at-arms. By whose diligence, and by that of the army which my said lord of Burgundy has lately raised, the king, our said lord, hopes, that during this season, notable exploits of war and a great recovery of the country will take place, with the aid of my said lord. Whereby a great number of the subjects of the king and of my said lord of Burgundy will be able to live in greater repose and surety than they have hitherto done.

Item, in so much as regards the ix., x., xj. and xij. articles ; because that in some of them my said lord of Burgundy requires to have four hundred men-at-arms, or the sum for paying them, so that he may join them with the army appointed by my said lord of Burgundy under messire Jehan de Luxembourg, count de Ligny, for the surety of Picardy, my said lord of Burgundy also offers himself with voulente mon dit seigneur de Bourgongne au service du roy, et de se exposer, ses subgiez et aliez, et tout ce que Dieux lui a preste, et en porter la charge autant et si avant que possible lui sera ; ou cas toutes voyes que ce sera le plaisir du roy de mettre sus une tres grande et notable puissance pour rebouter les diz ennemis et leur donner a faire en plusieurs lieux,— le roy, nostre dit seigneur, recoit joyeusement et en grant gre les belles et notables offres que lui fait mon dit seigneur de Bourgongne, de quoy il le remercie tant comme il puet. Et pour ce est son entencion de faire exposer et remonstrer lestat de son royaume de France, et les choses dessus dites aux Trois Estas de son royaume Dangleterre, presentement assemblez pardevers luy, pour y prendre et avoir bon avis et conclusions eues nouvelles du dit cardinal de Sainte Croix et des ambaxadeurs du roy et de mon dit seigneur de Bourgoingne, vacans de present au bien dicelle paix; dont depend partie de ce qui sera a faire, soit pour parvenir a paix, ou a guerre, se paix ou abs-

good will to the service of the king, both to expose himself, his subjects and allies, and all that God has given him, and to bear the cost of it as much and so far as he is able ; provided however that the king shall be pleased to raise a very great and notable power to drive back the said enemies, and give them something to do in several places,—the king, our said lord, receives joyously and most willingly the good and handsome offers which my said lord of Burgundy has made him, for which he thanks him as much as he can. And consequently it is his intention to make known and declare the state of his kingdom of France, and the things above mentioned, to the Three Estates of his kingdom of England now assembled with him, to take and have therein the good advice and conclusions newly had from the said cardinal de Sainte Croix and the ambassadors of the king and of my said lord of Burgundy, who are occupied at this time in the business of this peace ; which partly depends upon what will have to be done, whether to come to peace, or to war, tinence ne ce puent avoir ; et ce qui sera advise et se pourra faire en ceste matiere, le fera le roy savoir a mon dit seigneur de Bourgoingne. Et sil advient que le dit daulphin ne vueille entendre a paix generale, ou a trieve de trois aus, de deux, ou dun a tout le moins, et que journee soit prise pour besoigner au bien dicelle paix, le temps pendant de labstinence, le roy na pas pourtant entencion de habandonner sa coronne et seigneurie de France, mais la veult garder et defendre a laide de nostre seigneur, et au bon confort de mon dit seigneur de Bourgoingne, et de ses autres bons parens, amis, vassaulx, aliez et subgiez, par tous les moyens qui lui seront possibles. Et neantmoins sera tousjours prest de entendre a tous amiables et bons moyens de paix en temps si long, convenable, et raisonnable que homme ny soit deceu ; et aussy de y commettre de sa part gens de si grant et bonne auctorite quil doit souffire, pourveu que ainsi soit fait d'autre coste.

if peace or truce cannot be had ; and what shall be advised or can be done in this matter, the king will make known to my said lord of Burgundy. And if it so happen that the said dauphin will not hear of a general peace, or a truce of three years, or of two, or one at the least, and that a day should be fixed to see to the business of this peace, during the time of the abstinence, the king, nevertheless, has no intention of abandoning his crown and sovereignty of France, but will keep and defend it, by the aid of our Lord, and with the good help of my said lord of Burgundy, and of his other good relations, friends, vassals, allies, and subjects, by all the means possible to him. And nevertheless he will be always ready to hear all amiable and good means of peace for a period so long, convenient and reasonable, as that one should not be therein deceived ; and also on his part to commission thereto men of so good and great authority as ought to suffice, provided that the same be done on the other side.

Item, en tant que touche le xij. article, le roy a To the 13.
bien regard aus grans pouretez et meschiefs qui ont
longuement souffert, et suiffrent, ses loyaulx subgiez
de son dit royaume de France, et la grant charge que
mon dit seigneur de Bourgoingne et ses pais portent
a la occasion de la guerre, dont il a grant pitie et compassion. Mais il a grant esperance en nostre Seigneur, que lui, qui de sa grace le met et fait approuchier laage
de plus grant congnoissance, ses affaires auront plus grant prosperite. Car au plaisir de Dieu il y vacquera en sa personne et aura souvenance de ceulx qui luy auront aide et secouru en son tendre aage, pour re-congnoistre leurs services, labours, et grans charges
selon ce que bonnement luy sera possible; et lui semble
que le service que on lui fait en tel temps ne doit jamais estre oublie.

Et quant a ce que mon dit seigneur de Bourgoingne Compli-requiert que le roy ait sa personne, ses terres, seigneuries et paix en recommendation, et ne vueille ad-
conclusion,

Item, as to what concerns the xij. article, the king regards well the great poverty and miseries which his loyal subjects of his said kingdom of France have long suffered, and suffer still; and of the heavy charge which my said lord of Burgundy and his country have borne by occasion of the war, for which he has great pity and compassion. But he has great hope in our Lord, that He, who of His grace makes and causes him to approach the age of greater wisdom, will cause his affairs to be more prosperous. For, by God's pleasure, he will attend thereto in person, and will have a recollection of those who shall have aided and assisted him in his tender age, by remembering their services, labours and great charges as far as he well may; and it seems to him that the service which has been done for him at such a time ought never to be forgotten.

And because my said lord of Burgundy requires that the king would have his person, his lands, lordships and country in recommendation, and will not give faith to evil jouster foy a sinistres rappors que on lui feroit de sa personne, le roy a eu tousjours, comme chascun scet, et veult encores avoir, mon dit seigneur de Bourgoingne que son oncle, et ses pais et subgiez a lui obeissance, en bonne recommandacion, en toute faveur gracieuse. Et en oultre, na sceu ne veu aucuns grans ou petits qui lui aient fait sinistres rapors de sa dite personne. Et se aucunes lui en faisoient, il le vouldroit de ce advertir, comme son bon oncle, et le oir de tres bonne voulente. Mais il croit et tient certainement quil est tel prince, et aime le roy et sa seigneurie si tendrement, quil ne vouldroit ne daigneroit faire chose qui ne feust loyale et honnourable, et que noble et loyal prince ne deust faire.

reports which may be herein made of him, the king has always regarded, as every one knows, and wishes still to regard, my said lord of Burgundy as his uncle, and to have his lands and subjects obedient to him, in good recommendation and in all gracious favour. And further, he has neither known nor seen any persons, great or little, who have made evil reports of his said person. And if any such persons should make any such to him, he would willingly let him know thereof, as his good uncle, and to hear him willingly. But he holds and certainly believes, that he is such a prince, and that he loves the king and his lordship so tenderly, that he would not do so, but would disdain to do a thing which was unloyal and dishonourable, and such as a loyal and honourable prince ought not to do.

other things which you, and our other officers on your side have sent to us by your servant, Jaquet Lubin, for which we thank you very much, as well for the said instructions as for the said statement; and we have examined the whole at length, and afterwards have sent it to our council, who in like manner have carefully seen and examined it, and have decided that the contents are honourably and most reasonably made, and especially the said statement. But since the arrival of your said clerk we have not presented this to our very dear and well-beloved son, the king, for certain causes touching a like matter which we have to bring before our said son for the balance of a certain sum which still remains to be assigned to us in consequence of our dower here, to which we cannot obtain any answer or settlement in consequence of the hindrances and differences which have sprung up in our said son's lordship of France and Normandy. For these reasons we have caused your said clerk to be detained and to tarry with us for a long time, and until this present, in the hope of having from our esperance davoir de icellui notre filz, ou de son conseil, response et ottroy du contenu en notre exposition; ce que navons peu, ne ne povons avoir, pour les tres-grans empeschemens tousjours intervenuz, et qui ung chacun jour interviennent depar dela, comme dit est, de mal en pis, a quoy, devant toutes autres besongnes, il a esconvenu entendre et vacquer pour y remedier et donner resistance, comme de ce pourriez en brief avoir congnoissance.

Pourquoy, par ladviz et deliberacion de notre conseil pardeca, avons conclue de non plus traittier de ceste matiere, jusques a ce que les choses soient revenues et mises en meilleur termes et estat que a present ne sont, et que, (au plaisir Dieu,) esperons estre de brief, moiennant sa grace, et laide de ses loyaux vassaulx et subgiez. Et ces choses accomplies, comme dicelles vous pourrez advertir par escription, notre voulente et entiere affection est de nous employer et entendre de tout notre cuer a avoir response et conclusion du said son, or his council, an answer and a grant of the matter contained in our statement; and this we have not been able, nor are we yet able, to obtain, in consequence of the very great obstacles which have always intervened, and which daily do intervene, on that side, as has been said, going on from bad to worse, to which, before everything else, it is necessary to attend and give heed in order to provide a remedy and resistance thereto, as you will speedily discover.

Wherefore, by the advice and deliberation of our council here, we have determined to treat no further about this matter, until affairs are settled and placed on a better footing and condition than they are at present, and this (if it be God's pleasure) we hope will speedily be the case, by His favour, and by the assistance of the king's loyal vassals and subjects. When these things have been accomplished, whereof you can inform us by writing, our will and entire wish is to employ and devote ourselves with our whole heart to have an answer to and to complete the matter contained contenu en icelle exposition, et dautres choses, tellement que, Dieu devant, ce sera au bien et augmentacion de notre seigneurie et subgietz depar dela. Et pour les causes que dessus, a present ne vous envoions touchant ce que signifie nous avez par les dits instruccions que lettres adresans depar nous aux tresorier et receveur generaulx de Normandie, narratives tant du fait de notre assignement pour ceste presente annee, que des tailles, saucunes en sont accordées pour le temps present, ou advenir. Lesquelles lettres vous presenterez en notre nom aus dits tresorier et receveur, ainsi que verrez bon estre, affin que ilz soient plus inclins de vous bailler la dicte assignation sans plus y delaier ; et de ce que faire en vouldront, nous certifier par les premiers entrevenans par deca.

in the said statement, and our other business, in such a way as, before God, shall be for the good and advantage of our lordship and our subjects on that side. And for the said causes we do not at this present time send you any further answer as to the matter on which you have given us information by the said instructions, than letters addressed by us to the treasurer and receiver-general of Normandy, and these refer as well to the matter of our assignment for this present year, as to the taxes, if any of them are granted for the present time, or the future. These letters you will present in our name to the said treasurer and receiver, as you shall see to be good, in order that they may be the better inclined to give you the assignation aforesaid, without any further delay therein ; and what they desire to do herein, certify us by the first persons who are crossing over hither.

HENRY, by the grace of God, king of France and England, to our beloved and faithful, the treasurers and governors-general of all our finances in France and Normandy, greeting and love.

Our very dear and beloved cousin, the earl of Dorset, late commissioned and appointed to undertake and carry on the siege, on our part, before our town of Harfleur, at that time held by our adversaries, has caused it to be made known to us that, in consequence of a certain gathering together made by our said enemies in great power, who intended to raise the said siege, our very dear and right well-beloved cousin, John earl of Somerset, at that time our lieutenant de la guerre en France et Normendie, se tira au dit siege, et mena en icellui avec lui Mathieu Go et autres capitaines de gens de guerre du nombre de larmee que lui avons ordonnee, pour nous servir sur les champz et autrement durant ycellui siege, tant de resister a lentreprise de noz diz adversaires, lesquieulx vindrent a Moustervillier, et mesme assaillir et courir sur icellui siege tant per mer comme par terre, et illec se tindrent pour certain tempz en grosse puissance, durant le quel temps les gaiges des dits Mathieu Go et cappitaines dessus dits et des gens estans soubz eulx finrent, par quoy convint a icelui notre cousin de Dorset, pour la sceurete dycellui siege, trouver maniere de les entretenir. A laquelle chose faire, leur presta et paia de ses deniers jusques a la somme de quatre vint dix livres, Tournois, pour leur aydier a vivre.

Et en oultre, nous a semblablement fait exposer que pour tousjours scavoir au certain du couraige diceulx adversaires, a envoie par diverses foys chevaucheurs, and governor-general in the matter of the war in France and Normandy, advanced towards the said siege and brought to the same along with him Mathieu Go and other captains and troops from the force of the army which we had provided for him to serve us in the field and in other ways during the siege aforesaid, as well to resist the enterprise of our said enemies, who came to Montivilliers and even attempted to attack and raise the siege aforesaid, as well by sea as by land, and there continued for a certain time in great power, during which time the pay of the said Mathieu Go and the captains aforesaid and the troops under them expired, whereupon it was necessary for our said cousin of Dorset, for the safety of the said siege, to find the means of retaining them. To do this he advanced and paid of his own money as much as the sum of fourscore and ten livres, Tournois, to enable them to live.

And moreover, he has in like manner caused it to be made known to us that, in order to have uninterrupted and certain knowledge of the plans of the said adversaries, messagiers et espiez sur les marches de Picardie, d'autre part, ausquelz il a semblablement paie de ses deniers jusqua la somme de cent cinquante livres, Tournois, et plus; en nous requerant que lui veuillons faire paier et restituer icelles sommes de quatre vingt dix livres, Tournois, dune part, et de cent cinquante livres, Tournois, d'autre part.

Pourquoy nous, considerans les bons et agreeables services a nous fait par notre dit cousin en icelui siege, et que tout estoit pour le bien de nous et du siege, vous mandons et expressement enjoignons que, par notre bien ame Pierre Baille, receveur general des dits finances, vous faictes paier et restituer a icelui notre cousin de Dorset les dites sommes de quatre vingt dix livres, Tournois, dune part, et de cent cinquante livres Tournois, d'autre part, par lui payee ainsi et pour les causes dessus dictes. Et par rapportant ces presentes et quictance, ou quictances, de

he has sent at different times couriers, messengers and spies to the borders of Picardy, on the other part, to whom he has in like manner paid, out of his own money, as much as the sum of one hundred and fifty livres, Tournois, and more; and he has requested of us that we would be pleased to cause to be repaid to him those sums of fourscore and ten livres, Tournois, on the one part, and of one hundred and fifty livres, Tournois, on the other part.

Wherefore, considering the good and acceptable services to us rendered by our said cousin in this siege, and that the whole was for the advantage of ourselves and of the said siege, we command you and expressly enjoin you that by our well-beloved Pierre Baille, receiver-general of the said finances, you cause to be paid and returned to our said cousin of Dorset the said sums of fourscore and ten livres, Tournois, on the one part, and of a hundred and fifty livres, Tournois, on the other part, by him thus paid and for the causes aforesaid. And upon the mere production of these presents, along with the acquittance, or acquittances, of our

roy de France, singuliere affection d'amour et parfait vouloir a toute vraye paix, entiere union, et bonne concorde.

Treshault et puissant prince, notre tres chier nepveu, ainsi que par plusieurs foiz vous avons escript, oir de voz nouvelles en bien et estre acertenez du bon estat, sante, et prosperite de votre tres noble personne, nous est grant liesse et consolation. Pourquoy vous prions que souvent nous en faciez savoir pour notre singulier resjoissement. Et si de nous vous plaisoit savoir le semblable, nous estions a la facon de cestes en tresbonne disposition, graces a notre Seigneur, qui le pareil tous temps vous vueille octroier, ainsi que de bon cuer le desirons et que pour notre propre personne mieulx le saurions souhaitier.

Au surplus, tres hault et puissant prince, notre treschier nepveu, vous savez les promesses par vous a nous faites touchans la delivrance du Mans, et des autres places qui estoient en votre obeissance ou conte

France, wishes singular affection and love and a perfect desire for all true peace, entire union, and good concord.

Most high and powerful prince, our very dear nephew, as we have oftentimes written to you, it is to us great pleasure and comfort to hear good tidings of you, and to be ascertained of the good estate, health and prosperity, of your most noble person. Wherefore we pray you that you would often let us know hereof for our singular rejoicing. And if it please you to hear the like of us, we were at the making of these present letters in very good health, thanks to our Saviour, whom may it please always to grant the like to you, which we desire as heartily as we could wish it for our own person.

Moreover, most high and powerful prince, our dear nephew, you know the promises made by you to us touching the deliverance of Le Mans, and the other places which were in subjection to you in the comté of Maine, and the du Mayne, et les causes pour les quelles avez este meu de ce faire ; qui sont pour mieulx et plus de legier pervenir au bien de paix entre vous et nous. Car, comme tousjours vous a este dit et par nous souventes foiz escript, la dicte delivrance mise a execusion effectuelment est ung des meilleurs et plus convenables moitees pour y pervenir. Et en laquelle matiere concernant le fait de la dicte delivrance, auparavant et depuis le temps quelle se devoit faire, tant envers Mathieu Go et Foulques Heton, commissaires par vous ordonnez a icelle faire, comme envers Moundeford et les autres qui tenoient les dits places, nous nous sommes mis en tous les devoirs qui convenablement faire se est peu, et plus avant quil ne sembloit a beaucop le gens que faire se deust, ne que vous mesmes lentendies. A quoy toutes voies les dessus diz nont aucunement voulu obtemperer. Et voians les subterfuges, cautelles et dissimulacions quilz faisoient, (pour plus encore nous mettre en notre devoir, et a ce que par vous et eulx causes by which you have been moved to do this ; which are that you might the better and more easily attain the advantage of a peace between you and us. For, as it has always been said to you and oftentimes written by us, the said deliverance effectively put in execusion is one of the best and most fitting means to attain peace. And in this matter concerning the business of the said deliverance, both before and since the time when it ought to have been done, as well in regard to Matthew Go and Foulques Heton, commissioners appointed by you to do this, as also in regard to Mundayford and the others who held the said places, we have done our duty in every way in which it could possibly be done, and indeed we have herein done more than in the opinion of many people we ought to have done, or than you yourself know. To these the persons abovesaid would in no wise obey. And seeing the subterfuges, pretences and dissimulations to which they resorted, (in order that we might still further perform our duty, and that you and your subjects might Entre lesquelz voz conseilliers dune part, et nos diz ambaxeurs d'autre, (veuz premierement et bien entenduz les subterfuges, cautelles et dissimulations dessusditz que faisoient les diz Mathieu Go, Heton, Mundefort et autres, qui tenoient les places, qui

know and understand the good faith which we have kept in this matter, and have discharged the aforesaid duties which we have undertaken as incumbent on us, and that everyone should know the good intention which we have towards the accomplishment of the chief matters, and that they might be preserved and come to a good end and issue, and that we would not have it that by any shortcoming on our part the matter should be broken off, or any mischief should arise, nor that it might be said that we would take any undue advantage over you to your harm, nor avail ourselves of any occurrence which might arise within your jurisdiction,) we sent our accredited messengers and ambassadors to the members of your great council which are at Rouen, to show them at full length the matters abovesaid. Between which your said councillors on the one part, and our said ambassadors on the other (having in the first place seen and well considered the subterfuges, pretences and dissimulations abovesaid made by the said Matthew Go, Heton, Mundeford and others, who hold the strongholds, which is nestoit ne pour votre honneur ne pour votre prouffit, ne pour bien que on peust congnoistre qui en peust ensuir, aincois, comme est vraysemblable par les apperances et demonstrances quilz faisoient, estoit plus pour perturber et empescher le bien de paix dessus dit, ce que tenons pour certain, et ne revocquons point en doute quil ne venoit ne procedoit aucunement de votre vouloir, entencion ne consentement,) ont estes faiz certains appoinctemens pour le bien des dictes matieres, lesquelz, comme pensons, vous ont este notiffiez et faiz savoir par iceulx gens de vestre conseil residens au dit lieu de Rouen, et ausquelz appoinctemens ne aux commandemens par vertu diceulx faiz de votre part, ne aux sommacionz et requestes faites de la notre aus diz Mathieu Go, Heton, Mundeford, et autres qui tiennent les places, na aucunement par iceulx este obey ne obtempere. A la quelle cause, selon la teneur des ditz appoinctemens, ilz sont demourez desobeissans envers vous, et desadvouez de votre part comme indig-neither to your honour or profit, nor for any conceivable advantage which may result from it, but, as is probable by the show and demonstration which they make, is rather to disturb and hinder the blessing of the peace above-mentioned, as we hold for certain, and will never consider it questionable that this neither came nor proceeded in anywise of your will, intention nor consent,) there have been made certain arrangements for the good of the said matters, which, as we think, have been notified and intimated to you by the members of your council resident in the said town of Rouen, and neither to these arrangements nor to the commandments by virtue of them made on your part unto the summons and requests made on our part to the said Matthew Go, Heton, Mundeford and others who keep those fortresses, has any obedience or submission whatever been made. In consequence whereof, according to the tenor of the said arrangements, they have become disobedient towards you, and are disavowed upon your part as unworthy of being

nes destre comprins ou benefice des treues, et reservez expressement dicelles ; et en ceste qualite, et pour le tort en quoy ilz se sont mis, et la grant faulte quilz ont faict, et obvier aussi aux inconveniens qui estoient fort adoubter de advenir, mesmes en la matiere principale de paix, se provision ny eust este mise, avons este meuz de proceder alencontre deulx en la maniere que faisons.

But, most high and powerful prince, our very dear nephew, because we do not know whether you have in any way been informed of anything touching the matters abovesaid otherwise than is stated above, and on this account you and the people in England possibly imagine that we are not so inclined and disposed, nor that we have the same goodwill and affection towards you, and for the prosecution of the peace, as we really have, be assured that the truth of the circumstances above-mentioned is such as we have stated it to be. And in order that herein you may be still more fully

Si vous prions, tres hault et puissant prince, notre treschier nepveu, que icellui notre eschancon dessus nomme es matieres dessus dictes vous vueilliez benigne-ment oir et escouter, et adjouster plaine foy et creance a tout ce quil vous dira de notre part sur ce ; en nous signifiant se chose vous plaist que faire puissons pour

For we would have you believe that we neither have done, nor wish to do, anything touching the matters aforesaid, nor any others whatsoever, otherwise than that you should have the same advantages in these arrangements in regard to us, whatsoever that may be, as we have with you in the said matters, nor would we be pleased were it otherwise.

Wherefore we pray you, most high and powerful prince, our very dear nephew, that you would be pleased graciously to hear and give heed to this our cupbearer above-named in the matters specified above, and to give him faith and credence in all that he will say to you on our part herein ; letting us know if there is anything which it is your pleasure de votre personne, de quoy avons este tres joyeux, et prenons plaisir bien grant toutes les foiz que en sommes acertenez en bien. Si vous prions que souvent nous en vueillez faire savoir, pour notre singulier resjoyssement. Et se des notres desirez semblablement oir, nous et notre treschiere et tresamee compaignee la royne, votre niepce, estions alescripture de cestes en tresbonne convalescence et disposicion de noz personnes, graces au doulz Jhesu Christ, qui le semblable, par son plaisir, vous vueille tout temps octroier, ainsi que de joyeux courage et de bon vouloir le desirons.

Et treshault et puissant prince, notre treschier He is de- oncle, pour ce que loiaument et de bonne foy voulons sirous of peace, de notre part sans dissimulacion proceder en la matiere de paix generale dentre vous et nous, et que de entiere affection desirons que elle soit conduite et conclude en toute bonne perfection pour le relievement du pouvre peuple qui tant longuement par guerre a

the good estate and prosperity of your person, whereof we have been right joyous, and we take great pleasure whenever we are informed of your welfare, wherefore we pray you that you would be pleased often to make us acquainted herewith, for our singular rejoicing. And if you desire in like manner to hear of ours, we and our very dear and well-beloved companion, the queen, your niece, at the writing of these present letters were in excellent bodily health, thanks to the gentle Jesus Christ, Whom may it please to grant you the like always as you would most heartily wish it for yourself.

And, most high and powerful prince, our very dear uncle because we truly and in good faith desire, upon our part, without dissimulation, to proceed in the business of a general peace between you and us, and whereas we with entire affection desire that it should be conducted and concluded in all good perfection for the relief of the poor people who so long have been troubled and ruined by war,

Si vous prions de rechier que le dit Gartier vueillez benignement oyr, et adjouster plaine foy et credence a tout ce quil vous dira de nostre part, et par lui nous signifier se chose vous est agreable qui faire puissons, et nous lacomplirons tres voulentiers et de bon cuer.

Treshault et puissant princee, notre treschier oncle, and because we wish also to keep and observe (by the help of God's favour) the conclusions which we have taken upon the business of our passage across the water, to hold and keep the mutual meeting between our two selves, as well for the cordial and entire desire which we have for the good of this peace as for the singular love and affection which we have for your person in all desire of good concord, we send at this present time to you Garter, king of arms, as well fully to explain to you, with your permission, certain things touching the said matter, and especially what we have arranged and concluded touching our said passage. Wherefore we pray you moreover to be pleased favourably to hear the said Garter, and to give full faith and credence to all that he will say to you on our part, and by him to let us know if there is anything which we can do for your satisfaction, and it shall be done most willingly and cordially.

Most high and powerful prince, our very dear uncle, avoir eu et receu de Pierre Baille, receveur general du Normandie, la somme de deux cens vingt livres Tournois, pour la parpaye de certain voyage par nous fait de ceste ville de Rouen a Caen et ailleurs en la Basse Normendie, en la compaignie du treshault et puissant prince, monseigneur le duc de York, lieutenant general et gouverneur de France et Normendie, semblablement que autres gens du grant conseil du roy, notre dit seigneur ; icelui voyage fait a pourveoir aux necessitez du pays, au bien et honneur du roy, notre dit seigneur, de sa justice, et a la transquilité de ses subgetz. Ou quil voyage nous affirmons en notre conscience avoir vaque par cent douze jours, commencans le vingt septieme jour de Mars, lan mil eccc. quarante trois, avant Pasques, que nous partismes du dit lieu de Rouen pour le fait du dit voyage, et finie le seizesme jour de Juillet ensuivant, inclus, qui montent, au pris de dix livres Tournois pour chacun diceulx jours, unze cent vingt livres Tournois. Sur la quelle somme paiement nous a este fait par le dit and received of Pierre Baille, receiver-general of Normandy, the sum of two hundred and twenty pounds Tournois, in full payment for a certain journey by us made from this city of Rouen to Caen, and elsewhere in Lower Normandy, in the company of the most high and powerful prince, my lord the duke of York, lieutenant-general and governor of France and Normandy, in like manner as other members of the great council of the king, our sovereign lord ; this journey being made to provide for the necessities of the country, for the good and honour of the king, our said lord, for his justice, and for the quiet of his subjects. In this journey we affirm in our conscience that we have been employed for one hundred and twelve days, beginning on the twenty-seventh day of March in the year one thousand eccc. and forty-three, before Easter, when we set out from the said place of Rouen upon the business of the said journey, and finishing on the sixteenth day of July following, included, which, at the rate of ten pounds Tournois for each of these days, amounts to eleven hundred and twenty pounds Tournois. Of the which sum payment has receveur general de quatre cens livres Tournois, et par Remon Monfault, nagueres, et par aucun temps, receveur general de Normendie, de cinq cens livres Tournois. Ainsi nous restoit la dicte somme de deux cens vingt livres Tournois ; de la quelle nous sommes contens et bien paiez, et en quittions par ces presentes le roy, notre dit seigneur, le dit receveur general, et tous autres.

En tesmoing de ce nous avons escript a ces dites Date. presentes notre nom, lesquelles nous avons scellees de notre signet, a Rouen, le xxvij. jour de Juillet, lan mil cccc. et quarante six.

been made to us by the said receiver-general of four hundred pounds Tournois, and by Remon Monfault, formerly, and for some time, receiver-general of Normandy, of five hundred pounds Tournois. So there remained to us the said sum of two hundred and twenty pounds Tournois ; of the which we are content and well paid, and thereof we acquit by these presents the king, our said lord, the said receiver-general, and all others.

In witness of this we have written our name to these presents, which we have sealed with our signet, at Rouen, the xxvij. day of July, in the year one thousand cccc. and forty-six.
